Last week the Maritime Trade Review expressed the opinion that the draft Recilesiastical training, being shut out from communication with the world and prevented from rea ling anything not selected from the bytheir instructors, the world would be peopled by classes of sectarian bigots who would be ever ready to enforce their opinions in the Gloucester fashion. As it is now the boy's daily contact with boys of other orceds shall have taken place." Mr. Cornwall did not, like certain Border editors, proposition that his sect does not monopolize all the virtue and generosity in the world, and his general reading makes him receive the partisan historical teaching of his school with critical caution—with a sufficient degree of doubt to prevent his becoming an intolerant bigot. The Catholic, comparing some of the acts of Popes with the teachings of Christ, may have his faith in infallibility lessened so far as to allow. some of the acts of Popes with the Congress has reported against Recipro city, and that with the Republican leaders, Blaine and Morton, opposed to it, and the Democrats soon coming into superiority of purity of heart and life over the strictest adhesion to dogmas and ordinances, etc.—are kept from being lost sight of in the bickerings of cleries and the clash of creeds. The proper proportion of ecclesiastical instruction to be given with other teaching and the proper place for such teaching —whether the home, the school or the vestry—are fit subjects for discussion, but there can be no doubt about the blessedness of the freedom of youth from absolute clerical control. The boy who now mixes freely with his fellows, and has a taste for reading and any liberty of choice in the selection of books and newspapers, must be narrow minded indeed if he become a bigot of any denomination and look on the holders of other creeds as infidels and lost sheep. He may believe his own faith the best, the purest, the safest, but he cannot doubt the salvation of every man who loves his neighbor as himself and shows his fear of God by keeping his commandered the c superiority of purity of heart and life toilettes of Boston belles? Here are the over the strictest adhesion to dogmas and ordinances, etc.—are kept from beloves his neighbor as himself and shows his fear of God by keeping his commandments,—the commandments given in the Bible, not those promulgated by Popes, or Councils, or other human authorities. It is for the interest of some educated and intelligent men, because they are ecclesiastics or politicians, to preach a narrowness of creed that is incomprehensible to all but those who have been taught only what some clerial director considered good for them.

Park, no Central Park here, and the Boston belle dresses herself up only for the mir-ror and a few friends. This private show being over, the fine attire is care-fully locked up, out comes the old bonnet again, a waterproof cloak or a Scotch plaid, a pair of galoches over a pair of solid leather boots, and if an unlucky poet, who had admired her in her draw-ing goom, shauld meet her in the street ing room, should meet her in her draw-ing room, should meet her in the street, he would break his lyre to pieces. No wonder poets are so scarce in New Eng-land.
