FOREWORD

EVER since the United States severed diplomatic relations with Germany, Americans have been busy absorbing the experiences of Canada. Our country and the part she has played in the war have furnished material for articles in many of the leading American magazines and one of the most comprehensive that it has been our good fortune to read deals with the Patriotic Fund. Mr. Paul U. Kellogg, a prominent sociologist and editor of "The Survey," published in New York, visited Montreal and made a thorough enquiry into all phases of the work undertaken by the Fund in so far as it was possible to do so without visiting other points. The resultant article from his pen is one of the most thorough and entertaining descriptions that has yet been published. It has been reproduced in pamphlet form by the American National Red Cross from whom we have obtained a number of copies, feeling that all officials and friends of the Fund would find the article of absorbing interest.

PHILIP H. MORRIS,
Assistant Secretary,
Canadian Patriotic Fund,
