FUSION MEETING
We are hoping to get together; we have made certain advances; very radical ones. Col. Cockshutt is apparently unsatisfactory to you, and Mr. Harold—without deciding or lauding either one—equally so to us. We have gone so far, won't you meet us by making a proposition?
"What have you against John Harold?" demanded Mr. Davidson.
"He was nominated by a minority of the riding two years ago," replied Mr. Smoke.
"Why should we accept him, a man with whom we have had nothing to do? I say that John Harold has no more right to this riding because of his nomination two years ago than I have to this riding in Toronto at that time."
"We came here with no proposition to avoid strife, but it was the Conservatives who called the meeting. Why should you have an objection to Mr. Harold. He is no more Laurier than Rowell? Have you not confidence in his patriotism? He is the best man we can get on either side in the riding, and we ask you to accept him to-night; he will be no worse than Mr. Rowell and perhaps better."
"Take No Chances."
"We want union government supported, we want to take no chances," remarked Dr. Johnson.
"I have nothing against John Harold. There was a lot of kicking over conscription during the last session of Parliament. John Harold was one of the first to attend Geo. P. Graham's anti-conscription meeting."
"And Scott Davidson?" observed a member.
"I was not there," declared Mr. Davidson.
"I want to be sure that North Brant is supporting union government," continued Dr. Johnson. "Perhaps Mr. Harold will support it. Laurier says he will support conscription, but we all know what his word is worth."
"I object to such campaign talk," interposed Dr. Dunton.
"When Robert Borden asked Col. Cockshutt to run," continued Dr. Johnson, "it was because he knew the latter would support union government."
"It was with Mr. Harold when he met Laurier in Toronto," observed Mr. Davidson. "And in fighting on the conscription bill Mr. Harold talked plainly, and showed Laurier no quarter. John Harold stands as a man here. Does he not?"
"Send him to see Sir Wilfrid again," suggested Dr. Johnson.
"Mr. James Scace laid stress upon the urgency of the situation. The meeting was called not for discussion or comparison of candidates, but to reach a decision which might eliminate strife in this section of the empire, a foundation important enough to induce all to suppress antagonism and elevate their manhood."
All had made mistakes in the past, the speaker admitted, but what meant had not then been grasped. It was the biggest thing which had happened in Canada during the war. In the words of Lloyd George, "the success of our future depends on our solidarity."
The speaker saw no need for bickering and fighting. Mistakes of the past must be forgotten, and matters faced on an even level.
When the speaker had nominated Col. Cockshutt some weeks ago, he had acted in all sincerity; a man certain to support Union Government had been selected, and one who had been suggested by the Cabinet Ministers.
"Was he suggested by the Cab-net Ministers, or by Sir Robert Borden?" demanded Mr. Davidson.

"By the Ministers, I believe," replied Mr. Scace.
"It is possible," continued Mr. Scace, "for us to consider Col. Cockshutt's nomination at this meeting? I think he would be acceptable to the electorate as a body. He is a sound man, of absolute purity of character and of sterling worth; a man whom we, you, the whole riding, knows and respects."
Dr. Dunton inquired why a political meeting was held on Saturday night.
"They pulled in their horns, I admit," observed Mr. Davidson, who had been present.
"Hardly that," corrected Mr. Scace.
Dr. Lovett explained the purpose of the meeting, a general one which was not a political meeting in the strict sense.
"We have been trying our best to play the game and play it square," declared Mr. Scace. "Where a Liberal member sat in the last House, the situation remains so where a Conservative sat, the same conditions should exist."
Col. Cockshutt should prove acceptable to all.
"Who is Mr. Harold's leader to-day?" demanded Dr. Johnson.
"I do not know," replied Mr. Malcolm.
"There is the crux of the situation," observed Mr. Scace.
"Who is your leader?" demanded Mr. Davidson.
"Sir Robert Borden, leader of the union government," replied Mr. Scace. "There is no doubt as to the leader whom Col. Cockshutt will support—Sir Robert Borden, leader of the union government, who is being loyally supported by the Liberal party everywhere, as well as by his own. In this circumstance, will you be as big as the rest of your old party?"
"Don't give us that argument," urged Dr. Dunton.
C. H. Waterous
Mr. C. H. Waterous paid a glowing tribute to the late Samuel Harold, father of John Harold. Liberals and Conservatives were equally patriotic to-day. The speaker admitted that Laurier had taken a stand which loyal Liberals, Mr. Harold among them, could not support. Every man who believed in union government had chosen Sir Robert Borden as his leader, and he and all alike should be unionists, and members of no political party. As a family, the Cockshutt family stood among the highest in Brant County. Mr. Harold came from an equally honorable house, and the speaker was satisfied that either would be a party should have a large majority in union government, the speaker considered.
Mr. Waterous considered the nomination of Col. Cockshutt a mistake under the circumstances.
"If we want anything to-day," he declared, "we want unity, and avoidance of friction, we want strong, loyal men at Ottawa. If this discussion is prolonged, we might just as well go ahead and look for an election."
No matter which candidate was elected in North Brant or South, he should be a union man through and through.
Dr. Reid
Dr. Reid urged sinking of all party considerations. He, himself, had long been a consistent unionist, and the sentiment was strong in North Brant. No agreement would be reached on the propositions now put forward.
To the speaker Laurier was anathema, and a danger to the country. He did not believe Mr. Harold would be a union man, yet he had once been.
Mr. Waterous resented any imputation of disloyalty to the Liberal party who had formerly supported Laurier, and refused to have such an imputation placed on Mr. Harold, the best man in the riding.
Dr. Reid explained that he had had no intention of accusing either Mr. Harold or the Liberal party of disloyalty.
"The suggestion was made," observed Mr. Waterous.
"It is nonsense," declared Mr. Scace. "We know that Mr. Harold and the Liberals are loyal. There is no use laboring that point."
"I am quite satisfied that we are wasting our time here," declared Mr. Smoke. He reiterated the willingness of the Conservative party in the four square for conscription as any man here. Does he not?"
"Send him to see Sir Wilfrid again," suggested Dr. Johnson.
Mr. Scace
Mr. James Scace laid stress upon the urgency of the situation. The meeting was called not for discussion or comparison of candidates, but to reach a decision which might eliminate strife in this section of the empire, a foundation important enough to induce all to suppress antagonism and elevate their manhood.

Dr. Anderson insisted that the candidate be a resident of the riding. "He refused to consider Col. Cockshutt," he declared.
Mr. Davidson urged that the Conservatives give evidence of their good faith by agreeing to Mr. Harold.
"Cockshutt in North Brant and Cockshutt in South Brant," declared, "is a little too much Cockshutt."
"You can't get too much of a good thing," observed Mr. Scace. "Will you nominate a Liberal-Conservative in the riding who will be acceptable to you?"
"You looked them all over," replied Mr. Davidson, "and could not find one to suit yourselves. I don't know your men."
"You do know them," reiterated Mr. Scace. "Face the point! If there is one who will suit you, we will dis him out."
"I object," interposed Dr. Dunton. "The question is an unfair one."
"Can you suggest any Liberal on whom the Conservatives would agree?" asked Dr. Anderson.
"We already agreed to Mr. Rowell," replied Mr. Scace.
"Would you do it again, if possible?"
"Yes," replied Mr. Scace.
"For myself, I would not consider it," replied Mr. Anderson.
"There is no man in the riding as well entitled to the union nomination as John Harold," declared Mr. Davidson.
"There is," interposed Mr. Scace. "You had to go outside of your riding," declared Davidson.
Mr. Smoke asked that the Liberals answer Mr. Scace's query.
"At this stage of the proceedings there is no man in North Brant who should displace John Harold," replied Mr. Davidson.
"That is not an answer," insisted Mr. Smoke.
"It is an answer," declared Mr. Davidson.
"Mr. Scace's question should be applicable to both sides," observed Dr. Dunton.
The Conservatives declared Mr. Davidson had been compelled to get out of the riding to select a candidate. They had considered Dr. Lovett.
To this Dr. Lovett took exception. His name had never been suggested. He demanded the source of Mr. Davidson's information.
"Mr. John M. Patterson was my informant," replied Mr. Davidson.
"If Mr. Patterson stated such a thing, he stated an untruth," declared Dr. Lovett.
Mr. Geo. L. Telfer appealed for acceptance of a Liberal in North Brant. He declared that Dr. Reid had cast suspicion upon Mr. Harold's loyalty.
"I had no intention of doing such a thing," observed Dr. Reid, "as I have several times already affirmed."
Mr. Smoke asked for a single instance where a Liberal was giving up a seat.
This Mr. Telfer could not do.
"In the West," observed Dr. Dunton.
"The Western seats are being contested by Laurier supporters."
"We are not responsible for that," replied Dr. Dunton. "We think John Harold has a prior right over all in North Brant."
"Col. Harry Cockshutt," declared Mr. Scace, "was the first Unionist candidate in the field. Why should he not have consideration?"
Mr. Smoke again moved the adjournment of the meeting, which was carried.
The delegates in attendance were: Conservatives—Dr. Lovett, F. Smoke, Paris; Dr. Reid, W. Jackson, South Dumfries; Geo. Simpson, W. Simpson, John Douglas, Onondaga; A. J. McCann, James Scace, Brantford; Dr. Johnson, Burford; Liberals—Scott Davidson, D. Dunton, Paris; Geo. L. Telfer, W. A. Kelmar, John Malcolm, South Dumfries; A. W. Hamilton, A. W. Varsackie, Onondaga; Alex. Edmondson, C. H. Waterous, Brantford; Dr. Anderson, Burford.
