New York Police.

New York, Aug. 14.—The secret society of the Hunchakist has been smashed by the efforts of the New York police force.

With the arrest of Kassak Jelalian on Sunday night, the end of the society became certain. This man confessed to District Attorney Jerome, the police say, that it was he who had directed the murders of Father Kaspar, whose body was cut to pieces, and the wealthy rug merchant, Tayshanjiau, killed on Union square.

He furthermore stated, it is said, that he had stood by while Bedros Hamptzoonian waited for the coming of the victim and pointed out the man. Promises New Sensations.

Smlt Ste. Marie, Ont., Aug. 13.—J.
S Coxey, leader of the famous army by that name, which in 1894 traveled on foot from Massilon to Washington, in an endeavor to force the views of the eccentric leader upon the United States Government, is a guest at the International Hotel, in the Canadian Soo. He says that his visit to Northern Michigan and the Canadian side would probably have to do with something equally as interesting in the near future.

Protestants Said to Cheer the Belfast Troops—Birrell's Statement.

London, Aug. 14.—In the House of Commons yesterday, the Irish Secretary, Mr. Birrell, faced a shower of questions concerning the Belfast strike. The Irish members of Parliament wanted the troops withdrawn from Belfast, and others urged the necessity of a full enquiry into the affairs. Mr. Birrell said:

"The Government is fully alive to the urgency of this matter, and is doing all it can to secure a settlement of the most unfortunate strike."

It appears that in the trouble at Belfast, there has developed a cleavage on religious lines. The Protestants have cheered the troops, while the attacking parties apparently have been composed of Catholics.

Consequence of Conference Decision
May Prove Disastrous.

London, Aug. 14.—(C. A. P.)—A correspondent who, The Standard says, is authorized to speak of the dominate feeling in Canada, writes to that journal respecting the all-red route. He states: "The Imperial Conference was a cruel blow of Canadian aspirations, Canada getting tired of awaiting reciprocity and being frankly annoyed by the insimustions of the enemies of the Empire in England. If the scheme is abandoned, what is Canada to think of British imperialists? The consequences to the Empire will be disastrous."

The Standard, in a long editorial, warmly demanding the establishment of the all-red route, concludes that the scheme is no sentimental vision, but a business proposition."

The Financial News, "on good authority," states that the suggested subsidy for the 25-knot service to Canada is $2,250,000 per annum for ten years, borne equally by the respective Governments.

CAPTAIN AS DIVER:

Shark Oversees Risky Piece of Work.

Work.

A sea captain's ingenuity and pluck are the subject of a capital story which comes from Hartlepool. Captain Ivor Mattson, of the Swedish barque Flora is the hero of the adventure, which occurred when the Flora was on a voyage from Norway to the Cape. Heavy weather was encountered in the Bay of Biscay, and the water commenced to make its way into the vessel at the bows. Despite the fact that the pumps were kept going—by means of the windmill on deck when possible, and at other times by hand—the water rose steadily in the hold, and eventually the Flora, which was by this time in the South Atlantic, was in a well-nigh waterlogged condition. The captain then decided upon heroic measures. It was impossible to stop the leak from the inside, so he determined to try and stop it from the outside. For this purpose a diving suit of some form was necessary, and out of a piece of sail cloth, Captain Mattson fashioned a huge bag, sixteen feet long and two feet in diameter, fixing metal rings at intervals inside in order to keep it in shape. At a suitable height he put in a small window, scraping the back off a cheap mirror for the purpose. Armholes and sleeves were fitted, and the whole apparatus so rigged up that the bag could be loweed into the water to the requisite depth to enable a person inside it to examine the hull of the vessel under water. Captain Matteon himself descended in this novel diving soit, and discovered, after considerable difficulty, two places where the water was entering.

self descended in this novel diving suit, and discovered, after considerable difficulty, two places where the water was entering.

With the aid of rags, rope, etc., he caulked the apertures, the dangers of the task being increased by the fact that, whilst the leakages were some four feet below the actual water line of the vessel, their depth mementarily increased to eight feet or so as the ship dipped to the long Atlantic roll. The pitching of the vessel, too, caused Captain Mattson to be continually thrown with more or less force against the hull, and indeed the friction gradually wore a hole in the canvas at the foot of the bag. Through this the water entered the bag and immersed Captain Mattson to the chin before he could call out to his men to haulhim up. Another unpleasant interruption was caused by a shark. All the morning before Captain Mattson commenced operations a large shark had been swimming around the vessel. The crew had fished for him with meat, etc., but without success, but at length the monster, rising to grab at so insignificant an article as an empty match box that had been thrown overboard. Captain Mattson had a shot at him with a revolver. The shark was just below the water when the bullet hith him, and evidently not much damage was done. Still, he swam away, and was not seen again until Captain Mattson was below in his extemporized diving suit. The crew at once warned the captain of the shark's approach, but the captain decided to go on with his work. The shark came up, and Captain Mattson, keeping close to the side of the vessel, saw him come round the bows. The pilot fish that accompanied him inspected the canvas bag, but the shark passed, apparently unheeding, some four or five feet off. Captain Mattson was stirst somewhat atraid the shark might attack his hands, and had his knife ready to defend himself if necessary. The leakages being repaired, the Flora, continued her voyage to Cape Town, which she reached in safety, and as a recognition of his daring and ingernity. Captain Mattson and, as a recognition of his daring and ingenuity, Captain Mattson was the recipient of several handsome presents.

Distributions were made recently in connection with three strange charities operating in the parish of Holtorn. One was the Isaac Duckett bequest, founded in 1620, to be applied in equal shares for the beneft of poor maid-servants who had served one master or mistress for seven consecutive years. Of late this period has been reduced to five years. Of 57 applicants 31 were elected to receive seach $20. The longest period of service boasted was 32 1-2 years.

The other two charities—Lady Hatton's and Mrs. Palmer's—both related to aged widows of over 60 years of age who had resided in the parish for ten years and never received poor relief. Under the former request about 28 widows received money, while Mrs. Palmer's benevolence was responsible for 24 old ladies receiving $25—the first half-yearly instalment of their $50 pension.
