Another Double Drowning.

Two Lunenburg Fishermen Drowned
While Trawling on the Grand Banks
—One Body Recovered.

At three o'clock yesterday afternoon the Lunenburg banking schooner W. C. McKay, Capt. Deal, came to port with her flag flying at half-mast and reported the loss of two of her crew. The victims are James Moscan, married, with a wife and two children, and Andrew Hurtle, unmarried. Both belonged to Lower Kingsburg, Lunenburg.

Yesterday week the vessel left Lunenburg where she got a squid baiting and went to the Grand Banks to fish. On Monday morning last all the dories of the bank visited the trawls. At noon when they came back one dory failed to turn up. This was the one that the two unfortunate young men were in and which was struck by a heavy squall and capsized. The vessel immediately set out in quest of the missing dory but after a two hours search it was found bottom up with the lifeless body of Moscan lying on it, but there was no sign of Hurtle who had gone to the deep.

When the dory capsized Moscan managed to climb to the bottom of the dory and held on grim death to a rope until he succumbed. The poor fellow must have struggled hard in keeping himself on the dory while being tossed about by the waves. His legs and arms were badly chafed so that it is believed he died chiefly from exhaustion.

Moscan's body was taken from the dory and put on board the vessel which returned to port. Last evening Undertaker Andrew Carnell took charge of the body, embalmed it and will send it to the late home of the deceased by this evening train.

In consequence of the tragedy the banker will abandon the voyage and from here will go to Lunenburg. The W. C. McKay carried eighteen men and for the season's fishing got 2,500 quintals of fish to her credit, nearly half of which was taken on the spring trip.

LONDON, August 27.
The diary of the late Count Hayashi reveals that originally Germany was anxious to be included in the Anglo-Japanese alliance. Lord Salisbury's government was in favor of Germany's inclusion, but Japan opposed it. Count Hayashi hints that Japan was ready to ally herself with Russia, if Britain was unwilling. In 1901 Baron von Eckhardstein, German charge d'affaires in London, made several visits to Hayashi urging an Anglo-German-Japanese alliance, to which he said Chamberlain, Balfour, Lansdowne, Devonshire and Salisbury were favorable. He said that whilst the German people were strongly anti-British, the German Government was not; that King Edward, Emperor William and Chancellor Von Bethov had several conversations on the matter in the Isle of Wight, and were anxious for the alliance. A triple treaty was drafted, and became the nucleus of the Anglo-Japanese pact. Hayashi represents British policy as then directed by a desire to isolate France. Whether Hayashi opposed the inclusion of Germany is unknown, the whole diary not being published.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.
President Wilson appeared in person before Congress to-day, and laid bare to the world the details of the nation's efforts to bring about peace in Mexico. The facts concerning Huerta's pretence of the peace proposals, and the policy to be pursued by the U. S. Government. The position of the States is as follows: No armed intervention; strict neutrality; no exportation of arms or munitions of war of any kind from the States to any part of the Republic of Mexico, and under no circumstances to be partisans of either party to the contest, that now distresses Mexico. Not to constitute the Government of the States as arbitrator, and to urge all Americans to leave Mexico at once and assist to move everything possible. To let everyone in Mexico who assumes to exercise authority know that the Government shall vigilantly watch over the fortunes of these Americans who cannot get away, and shall hold them responsible for their sufferings and losses to a definite reckoning that can and will be plain beyond the possibility of misunderstanding. President Wilson declared that negotiations for friendly mediation of the States are open to resumption at any time upon the initiative of the U. S. Government or that of Mexico. Accompanying the President's speech was the reply from Huerta's Government regarding the American proposals, written by Minister Gamboa, who suggested the following alternative policy for the States: "The reception of the Mexican Ambassador in Washington; the States to send a new Ambassador to Mexico city, without restraint; a strict observance of neutrality laws, and to see that no material or monetary assistance be given the rebels. Describing the Mexican conditions and events that led Wilson outlined how war and disorder, devastation and confusion seem to threaten to become a settled misfortune of the distracted country. He said the U. S. could wait no longer for a solution of things in the sister republic. Wilson's note to Lind read: "All America cries out for a settlement, and asks immediate cessation of fighting throughout Mexico; a definite armistice solemnly entered into and scrupulously observed; security given for an early and free election, in which all will agree to take part; the consent of Huerta, to bind himself not to be a candidate for election for President at this election, and an agreement of all parties to abide by the results of the election and co-operate most loyally in organizing and supporting her administration."

BERLIN, August 27.
In an article in the Zeitung Mittag, Baron Hartman von Richthofen, formerly secretary of the German Embassy at Washington, and recently charge d'affaires in Mexico City, criticizes America's "do nothing" policy and demands that speedy steps be taken to establish permanent government in Mexico. Revolution, he declares, would be impossible without the importation of arms by filibusters. President Huerta would not obtain the necessary funds to maintain his army if the States would prevent this. If America refuses to recognize Huerta, the Baron says, she should announce it publicly, and offer his successor a guarantee for the absolute closing of the frontier to both men and arms. In that case he believes Huerta would be patriotic enough to retire.

Ferdinand and Isabella

Ferdinand and Isabella were a devoted married couple who have become famous in history by acting as a joint angel for Christopher Columbus. They backed Christopher to the full extent of several bond issues, and Isabella even went so far as to pawn her jewelry in order that Columbus might discover a land which a few years later wiped Spain off the high seas with one hand.

At the time Ferdinand and Isabella were married Spain was infested with a large number of unpopular citizens called Moors, who were holding all of the offices and distributing the federal patronage in any way they saw fit. Ferdinand and Isabella determined to get rid of the Moors by confiscating their breath, and they were so successful in this pursuit that not a Moor got out of Spain with a perfect windpipe. The hardest Moor they had to deal with was a person named Boabdil, who refused to even become hoarse until he had slain several thousand Spaniards who were in a good state of health at the time. Boabdil shut himself up in the city of Granada and did not surrender until he was completely out of sang froid and canned goods.

From accounts given by people who knew Ferdinand and Isabella well, it appears that Ferdinand was the weaker vessel of the two. He was an excellent lawn tennis player, but objected to getting out on the firm line and having arrowheads sunk into his person. On numerous occasions Ferdinand was about to surrender in one proud Castilian leap when Isabella would mount her horse and egg on the Spanish militia with voice and whip. There was very little of the clinging vine about Isabella, which accounts for the depressed look Ferdinand wears in most of his pictures.

It was Isabella who invented the Spanish inquisition, which enabled a great many patriots to die for their country on the installment plan. Ferdinand and Isabella reigned for thirty years and each had the satisfaction of dying a natural death. They also died advised of considerable real estate, in Cuba and elsewhere, to which no confiding American ever read his title clear.

Great Crowds See Famous War Picture

Seats were at a premium yesterday afternoon and last night at the Nickel Theatre. The programme was a splendid one and gave general satisfaction. The famous war picture entitled "The Charge of the Light Brigade," by the Edison Co., was watched with the greatest interest, and every body was impressed with it. The picture is the work of the Edison Co. and it reflected the highest credit on the performers. It will be repeated this evening. The other pictures were good and the singing was again of a high order. Mr. Kieley hopes to present the Siege of St. Petersburg next week. Mr. Myers will be heard in two new songs this evening.
