Easier Now, and Harder Later.

By RUTH CAMERON.

A friend of mine, who has a baby boy who has just reached the toddling age. When I called there the other day I found her lamenting the destruction of a cherished vase. The toddler, of course, was the culprit. "That settles it," she declared, "I'm going to put everything that he can possibly hurt out of reach or away."

"Couldn't you teach him not to touch?" I suggested mildly. "Perhaps I could," she said; "but it would be easier and safer to put the things away."

Of course I said nothing further, but I thought of another young mother whom I know. She has two babies and no maid. One is three years old, the other four months.

A Tea Table of Fragile China Within Baby's Reach.

In her living room is a tea table with some beautiful and fragile china on it. "I don't suppose you can let Philip come in here," I said, when I first saw her home.

"Indeed, I can," she answered. "He knows there are certain things he isn't to touch, and that table is one of them."

"How did you ever teach him?"

"By keeping right after him when he first began to walk. If I said, 'No, no, Philip,' about that and other things once, I said it a thousand times. It was hard then, but now I have the other baby it means every thing to me to be able to trust Philip and make him mind."

JOHN ADAMS.

John Adams, second President of the United States, was born on a farm near the city of Boston, his father being engaged at the time in trying to pluck something from the rugged soil of New England besides the army worm and withered hopes. Young Adams did not take to the farm, as he objected to rising shortly after midnight and mingling with the irritable Jersey heifer, so he turned his mind toward the ministry.

The ministry in John Adams' time was different than it is now, inasmuch as the candidate was obliged to be here a lot of things about hell which could not be proven by personal testimony. Mr. Adams decided to take up something which did not require a man to believe anything he didn't want to, so he began to study law.
He would have made a good lawyer if the political bee had not stung him with so much success that he ran for every office in the gift of the Thirteen Colonies.

John Adams was one of the first men to revolt against the British empire and call King George III. a rascname. He never put a two cent stamp on a promissory note or a chat-tel mortgage without urging his countrymen to throw off the foreign yoke and adopt one of domestic make.

He helped Thomas Jefferson write the Declaration of Independence, correcting some of the spelling and in-serting a number of valuable commas therein. At the close of the Revolution he was made our first minister to England, appearing at court in a pair of light-fitting knee pants which displayed his gnarled Massachusetts legs to the best possible advantage.

John Adams was not a popular president, owing to the rigidity of his back-bone, which made him harder to handle than a trick broncho. The politicians did not like him, as he was able to appoint somebody postmaster on sheer merit alone. After completing his term he returned to his native state and tried to forget what had happened, dying on the Fourth of July, 1826, on which day his great rival, Thomas Jefferson, also passed beyond.

Mr. Adams was one of the baldest men who ever held the presidential office, and when angered or embarrassed lambent flames played over his dome. People who did not like his curt manner and prickly vocabulary had to admit that he was a genuine American, patriotic to the core and which he died his baldness and other faults were all forgotten and forgiven.

The Deutschland's Message.

Boston Transcript.—But the chief thing of interest about this submarine, overtopping every other craft or question connected with it by as much as Mount Washington overtops an anti-hill at its base, is the peculiar significance of the feat from the point of view of America's defence. Perhaps the Deutschland came to our shores to bring a letter from the Kaiser to his great and good friend Woodrow Wilson; but the message which it brings to the American people is of more consequence. This message is as follows: "You see that we can do it; the ocean that was your barrier of defence is our easy path of entrance to your ports; your battlement has become a door to which we hold the key." This is what the Deutschland says to the American people. The marine gateway which he has chosen for its entrance is one to which the German navy has become very partial since the beginning of the war.
The Elbe, Friedrich, the Kronprinz Wilhelm, the Appam, have been able to test and measure very thoroughly the waters within the Virginia capes.
These waters are the road to the national capital, to the Naval Academy, to the cities of Baltimore, Norfolk, Newport News and Richmond. They would constitute the principal base of any American fleet engaged in defending our coast. And they are the playground of these bright German navigators. The arrival of the Deutschland completes the circle of German investigation of these particular waters, whose vulnerability is now so strongly suggested. All this is a part of the message which the submarine brings to the American people. What is his answer to it?

YOUR BOYS AND GIRLS

Every mother should investigate the milk supply thoroughly before trusting the baby's life to it. The milk should be absolutely pure and free from preservative and be delivered fresh every day in stoppered bottles. Corks or wooden stoppers should never be allowed as they absorb impurities. Soon after the milk is delivered the mother or nurse should prepare enough food for the baby for twenty-four hours. This should be put into the feeding bottles at once, just enough in each bottle for one feeding.

This will make it necessary to have about ten bottles for the small baby.
The bottles should be stoppered with a little absorbent cotton and placed on the ice until needed. Remember that milk absorbs odors, and do not place it near onions or any vegetable with a pronounced odor.

When it is time to feed the baby one bottle should be heated by being placed in a pan of hot water. The other bottles should remain undisturbed until needed.

If a baby chokes, raise its left arm up over and very close to its head.
This will relieve it at once.

A Day With

Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir,—It is not my intention to write a diary, or to write about my travels since I left St. John's, New York, for England and Scotland, but a simple narrative that will interest the relations and friends in the Homeland, of what they are doing, how they look, by the way, and wishes them well.
Having left Edinburgh on Monday morning, July 10th, by the 9 o'clock train for Glasgow, I spent the day there and then left for Ayr by the o'clock train, arriving in Ayr at 10 o'clock. My next advance was towards the house where Lt.-Col. C.
Whitaker, Officer Commanding the Newfoundland Regiment, and his staff were living. On my way I met Private Brooks who very kindly cort me to the residence of the C. and his Staff. The building occupied by the officers seemed to be in every way suitable for its purpose.
In front of it is a Public Park with the Newfoundland Band, and some music three times a week. I saw ing "The Banks of Newfoundland" "Stacy's March", for the benefit of the public. I arrived at the Bill Quarters at 7:15 p.m. and as-Major Rendell, who cordially invited me to dinner and join the list of officers. I did not meet any C. W. Whitaker this evening but to see the gallant Colonel in the ing at the Race Course Barracks.
Major Rendell occupied the upper sat on his right, and my old friend Captain Greene, well known to me John's, sat to my right. I was to meet many old friends in the
