Gneiph. As winter is the time when farmers have most leisure, so it should be the time when they should accumulate most knowledge. The grain farmer should acquire knowledge in winter that may serve him in summer The dairy and stock farmer needs practical knowledge all the year round. No branch of farm work needs more intelligence and skill than the dairy, and no branch of the every day in the market reports. Why is this so? Cannot as good butter be made in the private dairy as in the creamery? Yes. Why, then, this poor reputation for dairy butter? Chiefly because the milk, cream and butter are not properly handled. Better butter may be made in a private dairy than in a creamery, and there need be no essential difference between dairy butter and creamery butter. though many city people think that there must be some special way of making ereamery good and a way of making dairy parts of their simple rusticity. There butter perpetually bad.

Our factory course for dairymen is full to overflowing, but we shall have room for about fifteen in the Home Dairy course which will be in operation at the same time as the factory-from January 14th to March 15th, 1895, and longer if necessary. Students may take all the lectures given in the Factory course, take part in the discussions and receive all the privileges of the factory students, except that they will work with utensils suitable for the farm dairy. We have creamers, deep cans, four cream separators, churns, workers, printers, milk testers and everything complete to give a thorough course in farm cuckoo, and the beat of the blackbird. dairying. Our instructor is painstaking and obliging. Let there be an awakening to the importance of good butter in districts where there are no factories. There are plenty of these in the Province, and cannot remove the stigma from dairy the storms and ravages of ages. And some of the Quaint Things to Be Seen Only a Few Miles From Germany's Capital-The Island of the Amager and Its Old_ Fashioned Inhabitants.

There is a little island lying in the sound a few miles from Copenhagen, the highly cultured capital of Denmark. It is called Amager, or Amak. Its quaint community, numbering 10,000 beg nuing at 5c yard, each yard inhabitants, descends from a colony of Hollanders, who were induced by King Christian II., in 1516, to come and cultivate its fertile soil. The fame of the Dutch for growing fine flowers, especially tulips, luscious fruits, and vegetables had spread far and wide, and the Copenhagen market at that time was sorely in need of these staples. The Amagers have occupied their little isle for nearly four centuries. Their Dutch boats have plied to and fro, between Copenhagen and the insular towns, their maids have served the aristocracy of the Scandinavian metropolis, and all have lived in constant intercourse with the most refined and enlightened of Danish society, but all this has not been able to overthrow their national individuality. Their patois still savors of the idiomatic Dutch and provincial gutturals, the same strange costumes are worn by Work White Aprons, on y.

Matrimonal alliances outside of their own environment are scarce. Here, however, their remains little of the superstitious. > In the Bresse and Vendee provinces, not far from fashionable Paris, men and women still cling to the grotesque headgear of the knightly period. Corsets are ridiculed, and the independent bourgeoisie of the Atlantic provinces snap their fingers at all new-fangled caprices of fickle society.

The same strict adherence to traditional life, costumes, and jargon, characterizes the peasants and fishermen of Friesland and Heligoland, across the Zuider Zee from historic Amsterdam, though not extravagantly pervaded by religious eccentricities. The Dutch chocolate companies who exhibited at 25c PAIR. the World's Fair arrayed the girl waiters in the peculiar dress and gold and silver caps which the Frisian women wear to the present day.

That in the heart of Prussia, a few miles from Berlin, the quaint Spreewalders have been able to uphold their Wendish individuality, is remarkable. The graphic sketches which Artist Westphalen, of Moderne Kunst, has gather. ed on the banks of the Spree show that they have not yet been influenced by the modern progress with which the great Prussian capital has always been identi-

Much that is new and much that is peculiar is encountered in the Spreewald. Both nature and people differ from the rest of Germany. For centuries this has been a most picturesque dairy needs these more than the home or region, separated from the historic highfarm dairy. No demand for low grade ways of the North. Many usages and dairy butter is what we see quoted nearly customs have outlived all innovations of modern times from the early Wendish period. The saga spring is still kept running, the forest and meadows are still peopled with all sorts of ghostly gnomes and uncanny water folk.

Sumptuously equipped buffets, with haughty-miened kellners, have not yet deprived these are nevertheless a few unassuming gasthoefe (roadside inns), with amiable hosts who provide plain palatable food and wolesome beverages.

Malcontent epicures had better steer clear of the Spreewald, but let all who yearn for air and sunshine, for sweet seclusion for soul and body, come to these shaded woodpaths and brook-watered meadows, where overfilled highways are unknown, where, instead of the everlasting wagon rattle and horse trot, resound the song of the lark, the call of the

The women go to the Lord's supper in funeral attire-an all black dress with white neckwear and white bonnet. The bride also appears in white on the wedding day. It differs from the funeral and sacrament in that for the marriage ceremony a plain black skirt and bodice is surmounted by a broad royal white ruffled collar, such as Norwegian and Danish pastors wear over their ministerial gowns while officiating. The collar almost conflicts with the large myrtle crown so that the rosy face can barely peep from between the tulipshaped adornments. HER CONFUSION PLEASED HIM.

A Grand Stand Incident at the Great County Fair

At the Fair the other day a pretty young woman accompanied by a little girl seated herself in the grand stand an hour before the first trotting match and took a little luncheon of sandwiches and cold tea. That she had come only to see the horses was evident, as she looked neither to right nor left at the fifty distractions in progress, but fixed her gaze in expectation on the ring which was being watered.

When the grand stand began to fill a good-looking young man, laying down his race-card, catalogue and umbrella, took his seat beside her.

The woman chattered away to the little girl about the forthcoming races, referring eagerly to her own card and catalogue as she did so, and quite unconsciously interesting the young man. He took more than one good long look at her when he got the chance, and seemed entirely pleased with his sur-

As soon as the first race began she grew unconscious of everything but the track before her. She stowl on her tiptoes, called out loadly her remarks, dropped her own catalogue and umbrella without seeing them, and in turn laid hold of those of the young man.

She used his umbrella freely, describing the racecourse with many a sweeping gesture. When her favorite won she pounded valiantly with the umbrella and fanned her face with the man's catalogue after the exertion.

Then she sat down and pencilled little bits of enthusiasm after the winner's name, still in the young man's catalogue, her own having been trampled under foot in the excitement.

She was tremendously at home with the umbrella, and more than once had to apologize for poking the young man's toes with his own property. He smiled in return, and seeming to enjoy it all hugely, stopped looking at the racecourse and looked, instead, at her. And she was a good enough picture to

At last she pulled out her watch, and in a flurry of excitement was preparing to go, when she noticed the umbrella. She picked up her own, with flushes and apologies restored the other to its owner, and with the catalogue rolled tightly in her hand, was making her escape.

"Won't you give me the catalogue too?" asked the young man. "It's also mine."

In hurried embarrassment the young woman restored it. The young man laid down the umbrella as a thing of small importance and quickly opened the catalogue. He scanned the little pencillings over and over, and then, with a smile, tore out the pages and tucked them away, neatly folded, in an inner pocket.

VERY FEW OF THEM LEFT.

Old-Time Plantation Darkies Almost as Rare as Black Swans.

One sees but little of the old-time southern plantation darkies nowadays. The reason is a good one-there are but few to be seen. The passing of the old southern body servant might serve as a theme for an interesting volume, so mysterious and so silent the march of the great throng of them to that bourne from whence no traveler ever returns. Nothing is said of them. They are not creatures of importance one would think, and their obituaries are never left after them in the public prints to tell people of the great work-a-day world that the poor old slaves of the past are dead and gone. Thus for more than twenty-five years the race of genuine old-fashioned plantation darkies has been playing out in Dixie, and they have been "layin' down de shovel and de hoe" in very truth.

Few of them are left-just a fewand they are to be found only on the large wilderness plantations of the extreme south. Here and there throughout the State of Georgia they can be found-right where they were left after the storm of civil war had spent itself, and they had stood there around the "big 'ouse" like sentinels on the watch tower to guard the mother and little one while the father slept far away on some battle hill. The fidelity displayed in this entitles the darkies of the '60s to endless praise. There was a war going on involving their freedom, and yet they stood like a firm phalanx around the homes of the southern soldiers while they were out at war, and these black. faced knights braved death at the hands of northern hosts to save the families of the men who had gone to the front to fight for a result contrary to the darky's

It was simply because the old fellows knew their masters were really their best friends and that they ought to stand by them. It was simply because they loved their life on the great plantations of the south, protected and upheld by their white friends and owners.

Renovating Soiled Candy.

A machine has been patented "to clean and put in eatable shape" any kind of confectionery. It is doubtful if anything could have been devised which would be more appreciated by the patrons of old confectionery women on the corners. Take your antique gumdrops, for instance, and throw them into the vibrating sieve of the machine. This sieve is concave and lined with a brush that is something between a carpet sweeper and a squirrel's tail. Running lengthwise of the sieve and having a sweeping motion is a long brush made of the finest bristles. The body of this brush is hollow, and, by means of a blow fan on top, a blast of air is forced between the bristles on the goods. There is no reason why candy should not be renovated like feather beds.-Boston Transcript.

Rubeustein Is Dead!

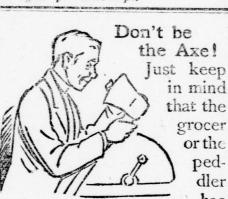

Sr. Petersburg, Nov. 20.—Auton Gregor Rubinstein, the famous Russian pianist and composer, died at Peterhof, near this city, this morning. The cause of his death was heart disease. He was within two days of 64 years of age. Auton Gregor Rubinstein was born in Wechwotynetz, on the frontier of Roumania, Nov. 30., 1830. He was taken to Moscow in his childhood and studied the piane under Alexis Villeing. After having received preliminary instructions from his mother. he made his first appearance in public when only 8 years old. When 10 years of age he went to Paris, remaining there two years and performing at a number of conservatories, which won him the encouragement and advice of Liszt. He next visited England, Sweden and Germany, and later devoted himself to teaching in Berlin and Vienna. Returning to Russia he was appointed pianist to the Grand Duchess Helen, subsequently director of the concerts of the Russian Musical Society. In 1868 he visited Paris and London, and in 1872 and 1873 he visited the United States. Since 1867 he held no position, but spent his time in traveling and composing. The jubice of his public service was celebrated in St. Petersburg by a fete on Nov. 18, 1889. He was ennobled by Czar Alexander II. in 1869, and in 1887 he received from the President of the French republic the decoration of the Legion of Honor.
