The Street Railway Bylaw Again Before the Council.

A Few Minor Amendments Made-What the Old Company hay as to Alterations - A Fetition from the Ratepayers.

The City Council held an adjourned

Aid. Dreaney moved that the committee rise and report. Lost.
Aid. Connor moved that the clause referring to the granting to the company the exclusive authority to construct, maintain and operate a surface electric street railway except on certain streets be referred to No.

Aid. Parnell moved that the clause, with some slight amendments made by the city colicitor, be adopted. Carried.

A jump was then made to sub-section D of clause 22, and Ald. Parnell moved that the clause be so amended so as to provide that ten tickets be sold for 25 cents instead of eight, and that all clauses dealing with exemptions be struck out. Ald. Parnell thought that in providing for cheap fares citizens were getting the soup, meat and bone. It was much more beneficial to the majority than a percentage would be. It would be a benefit to merchants because it would bringtradetothem which wouldother would bring trade to them which would other wise be left in the outskirts. Merchants had told him so. The people who used the street told him so. The people who used the street railway and those who did not would be benefited. The residential portions of the city would be extended. If the council in-tended legislating in the interests of the working classes they could not do it better than by providing for cheap fares. It would be unfair to grant exemptions to this company.

Ald. Gartshore said that he had moved a papers.

Ald. Gartshore's motion carried and Ald. Parnell's was lost.
When the clause providing that cars should run around corners at a rate not greater than four miles per hour, Ald. O'Meara moved that the rate be one mile instead of four.
The clause was adopted.
Ald. O'Meara moved that sub-section O be amended so that conductors of cars be compelled to stop their cars and order persons driving on the tracks to leave them rather than run them down.
The clause was adopted.
Ald. Gartshore moved that the 60-hour a week clause be amended so that no employe should work more than 10 hours in 24 or 60 hours a week. Carried.
A few minor amendments were made, the council adopted their report, and then adjourned at 10:30 without completing their consideration of the bylaw.
