GRIM RELIC OF THE PAST

Arena Where Christians Died Found Beneath Paris.

Paris, June 1.- In the very heart of Paris, shut in by iron railings and hidden from the street by a little hill, grass covered and adorned with trees. lies a most interesting relic of the days long since gone by when this beautiful city was under the rule of the Roman invader. The spot is known to those who know it at all as the Parc l'Arene, and the Roman arena which nestles quietly in its city was discovered by accident after a sleep of many cen-

Proceeding carefully, little by little, they laid bare a Roman arena. Whether the work was done by Roman slaves or conquered Gauls under the lash of a Roman taskmaster is a matter of conjecture. The entrance to the arena is from the Rue Navarre. To the right and left are the boxes reserved for the nobles, and one larger and better situated than the rest may have been for the emperor. On either side of the entrance are cages built under the seats. Looking into them the visitor can fancy that one had been a cell for Christians and captives, while from the other came the cries and snarls of hungry beasts that were to devour them in the arena to furnish a Roman holiday in the capital of sunny France. When half of the arena had been brought to view the work had to be discontinued, as it runs under the wall of an adjoining building used by an of an adjoining building used by an omnifous company. The travel- held that had it not been for the enthusiasm of Columbus, America would not have been discovered; had it not been for the enthusiasm of Garibaldi, Stephenson, Edison, Knox, Moody and Booth, their accomplishments never have been what they were. Enthusiasm, he said, was necessary to all success, and he pointed out how necessary it was that boys should be enthusiastic about their sports, and correspondingly about other things at various stages. That man was pitiable who was satisfied with himself. That man was in a pitiable condition who thought the church had attained its highest perfection or was on the down-grade. That man was in a sad condition, he said, who thought the world was on the decline, with no brakes strong enough to stop it. Too many people were content with little affairs, and oblivious to the necessitly of the advancement of God's kingdom. That man was in the deadli-est plight who held the pernicious thought that his life after all could not amount to anything.

Having brought out the idea of the necessity of enthusiasm, Mr. Brown stated that their enthusiasm should be towards anything worth directed while. The same things were not suitable at all times of life. The fitting thing was the seasonable thing. Referring to men, particularly, he thought that while every man should have his his responsibilities. He also referred to women who directed their energies to social functions as women who were dissipating their energies and lacking purpose. He pleaded for something in
