A WEEK IN A LENS DUNGEON.

pandemonium for several hours. At last the barrage ceased and they began to breathe again. That afternoon they ate the last of their bully. At eleven o'clock that night another British bombardment began. This time it lasted for seven hours, with gas shells, and again the two wretched men in the cellar had to put on their masks to protect them from the fumes.

The next day passed uneventfully. It was Sunday. The effect of this privation was beginning to tell on them. Lieutenant McLean fainted while Ebbs was trying to dress his wound. Ebbs himself was not much better. They knew that the end must come quickly. Neither of them could hold out much longer. They had no food and only about a wineglassful of water.

They made another attempt that night, but narrowly escaped capture by a band of Hunns who came round a corner of some ruins. They saw that the trench was still held in force by the enemy, and to think of getting through was only to think of being killed. They crawled back to the cellar again. On the way back, when they were both about dead-beat and fainting, they found a cabbage in what had been a garden of one of the cottages. It was a cabbage of two years growth and had two heads. They plucked it and sat in the darkness chewing the stalks for moisture.

The British artillery began the following day and continued with interruption during the night as well.

Just before daybreak on the Tuesday another heavy barrage opened up. There was no mistaking the guns.

"That's ours," exclaimed Lieutenant McLean. Ebbs stood on the steps of the outer cellar and listened intently.

"I think so," he said. "They will be attacking after this finish."

He could see the barrage creeping on over the Germans in the trench. It ceased for a moment, and then leaped a hundred yards and descended again. It was the heaviest barrage that had yet been hurled at the Hun positions. The ruins of the brick-heaps were blown to dust as it pounded them. It ceased again, then crashed on the space between the trench and the tottering cottages. Then it descended on the cottages themselves. Ebbs and McLean lay shuddering in their cellar as the shells thundered all around them. They heard the walls crash and fall. They heard the shells shriek over them and explode beyond them. Then out of the din, they heard cheering—British cheering. There was the clatter of heavy feet overhead. They heard British and Canadian voices shouting and roaring.

Ebbs stumbled to the foot of the stairs and called out some thing to the men above. He just cried out anything that came into his head. He saw several men standing at the top of the steps peering into the gloom of his cellar. One of the men had a map in his hand and was preparing to throw it.

"Don't throw the bomb," yelled Ebbs. "We are Canadians—the 8th."

The man with the bomb hesitated. He obviously thought that they were Huns in the cellar and they were pretending to be Canadians so that they should not be killed.

"We're Canadians," yelled Ebbs again. "Don't throw. There's an officer here."

The man with the bomb dropped his arm. "Come up," he roared, "and let's have a look at you. If you're Huns."

His threat was not heard by Ebbs who began to stumble up the stairs. When he reached the top he was seized by several hands and men from Canada with the maple leaf badge peered into his blackened, begrimed face.

"Where's your badge?" demanded the man with the bomb, menacingly and with distrust.

"Look at my shoulder straps," cried Ebbs, desperately. "I am of the 87th Battalion—the Grenadiers. There's a Lieutenant down there."

The attackers took a lighted candle and went down into the cellar. There they found McLean, lying on the bed, too weak to rise.

"That was a close call," said the man with the bomb, after they had satisfied themselves as to the identity of the cellar dwellers. "I wanted to throw that bomb."

Several hours afterwards Ebbs and Lieutenant McLean, seated in the open air, were able to drink from the water-bottles of their rescuers. Later that day they were back with their men, being cared for and nursed back to health. Both men were in a pitiable state of exhaustion. It had been indeed a close call.

Almost any woman can make her husband tremble by merely saying that she just heard something about him.

FRIENDS THOUGHT HE WOULD DIE

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" Conquered Dyspepsia and Restored His Health.

MR. ROBERT NEWTON.

Little Bras d'Or, C. B. "I was a terrible sufferer from Dyspepsia and Constipation for years. I had pain after eating, belching gas, constant headaches, and did not sleep well at night. I lost so much weight—going from 185 pounds to 146 pounds—that I became alarmed and saw several doctors who, however, did me no good. Finally, a friend told me to try 'Fruit-A-Tives'."

In a week, there was improvement. The constipation was corrected, and soon I was free of pain, headaches and that miserable feeling that accompanies Dyspepsia. I continued to take this splendid fruit medicine and now I am well, strong and vigorous."

TALKING PICTURE NOW PERFECTED

Marconi Invents a Talking Picture That Will Revolutionize World of Cinematography.

The secret of the talking picture has at length been solved, and the public may expect to witness the first perfected exhibition in a short time. This announcement means a revolution in the world of cinematography. Almost since the invention of the moving picture attempts have been made to introduce a method that would give the effect of making the characters talk. All these efforts were failures, however. The nearest measure of success was achieved by the gramophone, but these somewhat crude means often proved to be a source of embarrassment for the talking machine and the picture rarely synchronized.

The scheme was laughed out of the trade. For the secret of the new invention—well kept up to now—the world has again to turn to Signor Marconi and wireless telegraphy.

Asked if it were true that this marvelous thing had been accomplished an official of the company said:

"Quite true, and since you ask, I may say that not only is it an accomplished fact, but that the invention has reached the stage of commercial enterprise. There is no doubt whatever about its capacity to reproduce all sounds. As you know, all the nations in the world have been engaged in experimenting in order to produce the real thing, and at last wireless has accomplished the seemingly impossible."

This development is, of course, of the greatest importance to film producers. The motion picture play has always been the goal at which they aimed. The one great difficulty of making the speech of the act to coincide with his action has been overcome."

"And will the new picture be able to sing as well as speak?" was asked.

"Dance, cry, laugh, sigh—everything, Charlie Chaplin's famous walking slide, a hit on the head, a railway smash, the villain's sneeze—everything an actor does or says. When a man speaks or sings his voice is photographed at the same time."

Endeavors were made to keep the secret and to spin a surprise on the public by an exhibition. As a matter of fact the invention was completed long ago, but was shelved during the war, when the resources of the Marconi company were at the government's disposal.

An irreverent writer says that Satan's fall was probably due to his having slipped on a peel of thunder.
