MULES WIN BATTLES.

Loyalty of the Indian Muleteer a Byeword in the Armies.

Perhaps there never was a more picturesque campaign than that being carried on in ancient Mesopotamia.

The war is too engrossing to permit of very much attention being given to the spectacular. But we gain something of the color of the surroundings of things from the description given by Mr. Edmund Candler, representative of the British Press in Mesopotamia, of the transport service in Mesopotamia:

The first and second line transport is served by pack mules, Indian Army transport carts drawn by mules and ponies, camels, and a bullock

Army transport carts drawn by mules and ponies, camels, and a bullock train for the heavy guns. It is doubtful if any other army can count on being so efficiently served in the way of transport when fighting in an inhospitable country.

In the old days before the war the drabi (mule driver) was a worthy drudge, and as such respected. He got more kicks and less halfpence than anybody else in the army. Per-than anybody else in the army. Per-haps it is adversity that has moulded him.

Before August 19 there was only one case in which an Indian mule driver received a decoration. At Sahil and Smaiba alone six members of the corps were awarded the Indian Order of Merit. And in France the drabi's reputation was high.

It was drabi who pursued his escaping mule almost into the German lines at Loos, crying out that escaping mule almost into the German lines at Loos, crying out that the beast had broken his heel rope and that his Sahib would be angry. It was a drabi who sat through the whole of the bombardment at Neuve Chapelle when all the rest of his column had taken cover. He wancolumn had taken cover. He wandered about all night unable to find his destination. His cart was "written off," for the bombardier in charge, who had obeyed the order: "All into your dug-outs," said that nothing could live through that fire. In the morning the drabi turned up at Brigade Headquarters with his ammunition, explaining that he had lost the way. "Rasta bul gia, hazur." When asked what the fire was like he said that the wind from the shells was like the monsoons in the hills at Dharmsala.

And only the other day Ali Huscolumn had taken cover. He wan

And only the other day Ali Hussein, drabi, must need report himself sick on January 23. The doctor found a bullet in his shoulder. "Where were you wounded?" he was asked.

"In the battle, Sahib." "But that was on the 21st. Why did you not report yourself before?"
"Sahib," he said, fearing reproof.
"I had no time. The wounded were too many."

too many."
He had made the journey to the trenches in his cart ten or a dozen times through the darkness and cold and mud and rain. If beasts were decorated, the mule would be covered with ribbons. He also knows not defeat. In the second line the brunt of the work has fallen on the ponies and mules of the Jaipur and Bharatpur Imperial Service Transport Corps.

It is commonly reported in the force-with what truth I cannot say —that the Jaipur pony transport train won the battle of Shaiba. The story is that when the 200 carts appeared cantering up on the horizon in the blur of the mirage as dusk fell, the Turkish general, taking them for a new brigade of cavalry decamped. The camel so far has been but an auxiliary in the second line of transport, but much is expected of him, though he is woefully misunderstood. though he is woefully misunderstood. Like the yak, he is a providentially ascetic beast. The camel's mincing gait and supercilious glances are generally attributed to pose; as a matter of fact they are the expression of an inward and unsuspected delicacy. Neither the British officer nor the Indian sepoy, as a rule, understand the camel of a strange land. Too often the camel's uncouth bulk. derstand the camel of a strange land. Too often the camel's uncouth bulk, combined with his uncanny asceticism, leaves a false impression of hardiness, and adds to his yoke. Weight is piled on, and his cries ascend to deaf ears. But, well cared for, sufficiently equipped, and tactfully treated, the camel is second only as a beast of burden to the mule.

"At England, and England's Trade!"

A fiery leading article in the Frightful Hamburger Nachrichten (March 2) does its best to remove the doubts of Bethmann-Hollweg about the advisability of ruthless submarine warfare against England. The screech concludes:
"Until England is overthrown and ber trade on which she depends, debe trade, on which she depends, destructively attacked, the German nation cannot attain that booty of triumph to which it is entitled and the war for us and our allies will not end. All the nations battling for God and Right are waiting upon us. God and Right are waiting upon us.

What are we waiting for? The weapons with which to strike England are at hand. Honest German labor has created them. The courageous men who can wield them burn for the command to employ them. The the command to employ them. The whole German nation is united in the determination to use these weapons. At England and England's trade! That is the battle-cry which rings imperiously from the North Sea to the farthermost frontiers of the Empire!"
