thing, doubtless he thinks, as his father thought, that the British Parliament cannot carry on a great war; and ceatainly there is warrent for it in the discreditable exhibitions of the Brights, Cobdens, Gladstones, Gra-hams, and Russells. He thinks that we grudge the cost of the war, by our greed of commerce; that we have grown too laxuri-ons to bear privations; and, indeed, his organs have boasted the Russian people, weing little other than suvages, are below the reach of what are privations to more the reach of what are privations to more civilized nations. Then the French and English may come to the conclusion that their interference on behalf of the Turks, a mission to Mich they despise, is more political Quixotry, and acclement might rupture that wonderful aliance which ray ion in the path of the Czar. -If such is the attitude of Rus-rais, the only way to establish in peace is striking her to the ground. We orght not to stay, our arms while as to the section of the sectin section of the section of the sectin sectin nation which they despise, is mere political Quixotry, and accident might rupture that then have security for peace, because the military power of Russia will have been crippled. But we can place no faith in Russian treaties. Russia has systematically orders for a corps of 10,000 men, to be got perverted or voilated her obligations ; and noreover, a nation guilty of the massacre of Sinope, guilty of firing on flags of truce at on the field of battle; guilty of the death of Four merchant vessels had Poland; and gnilty of the attempt to assas-single and plunder the" sick, man"--can at the mouth of the Danube. sinate and plui never be retrained by anything but its own
