

prejudices which so universally prevailed against its selection have now been forgotten, and that public opinion throughout the Dominion now recognize that the choice was a wise one. That feeling should prompt its citizens to make the Capital a model city, noted for its beautiful parks, squares, and play grounds, with healthy homes for the poor as well as the rich; thus inspiring all its citizens to feel a just pride in their citizenship, each one doing his or her share to win for their city the admiration of the many visitors who will in future years be attracted to the capital of the Dominion.
