Mrs. Kate Sampson, a witness for the defence, said Mrs. Glover had made the state as the alleged, she had found her husband insulting Hattle Leblanc, who was working in their home, in the bathroom.

The witness said also that Mrs. Glover brought Habitie to the home of the witness and struck her under the chin, in an attempt to make her confess that she had acted improperly with Glover.

On cross-examination, Mrs. Sampson afthered to her story of the threats, but said that Hattle had denied the bathroom incident.

Brought to House Designedly.

This was but one of numerous sensations at to-day's session. A. Farley Brewer, junior counsel, in outlining the case of the defence, declared that Hattle Leblanc was brought to Glover's home designedly, on the night of the murder.

TROLLEYS UNFIT FOR SERVICE Because Motorman Cannot See the Cotton's jury at the morgue last night, "that Phillip Copeland came to his death by being struck by car No. 324 of the Toronto Railway Company at the Gerrardstreet bridge.

"We also find that the said car was unfit for service and is a danger to life.
"We also censure the motorman for exceeding the speed limit."

The inquest had been adjourned from Tuesday night, in order to procure more evidence. Several additional eye-witnesses were called. Rex. Moriey and James Foreshaw swore that they saw the boy being carried upon the fender. W.F. McRae, fender expert, testifled that the fender was in perfect working order. He could not understand how the boy got fender, unless he had rolled off the front fender, unless he had rolled off the front of it and, without tripping, it had passed over him. The main fault the jurymen found with the car was the fact that the motorman could not see the fender. Until this was remedied not a car on the whole system was fit for service.
