

SEE LOVES AND LIES.

By WILKIE COLLINS.

CHAPTER I.

Late in the Autumn, not many years since, a public meeting was held at the Mansion House, London, under the direction of the Lord Mayor.

The list of gentlemen invited to address the audience had been chosen with two objects in view.

Speakers of celebrity, who would rouse public enthusiasm, were supported by speakers of commerce, who would be practically useful in explaining the purpose for which the meeting was convened.

Money wisely spent in advertising had produced the customary result—every seat was occupied before the proceedings began.

Among the late arrivals, who had no choice but to stand or to leave the hall, were two ladies. One of them at once decided on leaving the hall.

"I shall go back to the carriage," she said, "and wait for you at the door."

Her friend answered, "I shall keep you long. He is advertised to support the second resolution: I want to see him—that is all."

An elderly gentleman, seated at the end of a bench, rose and offered his place to the lady who remained. She hesitated to take advantage of his kindness, until he reminded her that he had heard what she said to her friend.

Before the third resolution was proposed his seat would be at his own disposal again.

She thanked him, and without further ceremony took his place. He was provided with an opera glass, which he more than once offered to her, when famous orators appeared on the platform; she made no use of it until a speaker—known in the city as a shipowner—stepped forward to support the second resolution.

His name (announced in the advertisements) was Ernest Limore.

The moment he rose the lady asked for the opera-glass. She kept it to her eye for such a length of time, and with such evident interest in Mr. Limore, that the curiosity of her neighbors was aroused.

Had he anything to say in which a lady, evidently a stranger to him, was personally interested? There was nothing in the address that he delivered which appealed to the enthusiasm of women.

He was undoubtedly a handsome man, whose appearance proclaimed him to be in the prime of life—midway between thirty and forty years of age.

But why a lady should persist in keeping an opera-glass fixed on him all through his speech was a question which found the general ingenuity at a loss for a reply.

Having returned the glass with an apology, the lady ventured on putting a question next.

"Did it strike you, sir, that Mr. Limore seemed to be out of spirits?" she asked.

"I can't say it did, madam."

"Perhaps you noticed that he left the platform the moment he had done?"

"This betrayal of interest in the speaker did not escape the notice of a lady seated on the bench in front."

Before the old gentleman could answer, she volunteered an explanation.

"I am afraid Mr. Limore is troubled with anxieties connected with his business," she said. "My husband heard it reported in the papers yesterday that he was seriously embarrassed by the failure—"

A loud burst of applause made the end of the sentence inaudible. A famous member of Parliament had risen to propose the third resolution.

The polite old man took his friend, and the lady left the hall to join her seat.

"Wall, Mrs. Callendar, has Mr. Limore disappointed you?"

"Far from it! But I have heard a report about him which has alarmed me. He is said to be seriously troubled about money matters. How can I find out his address in the city?"

"We can stop at the first stationer's shop we pass, and ask to look at Mr. Limore's visit to him about it."

"The next day, a clerk entered Mr. Limore's private room at the office, and presented a visiting card."

11th of March, between five and six years since?

He considered for a moment. "No," he said, "I don't remember it. Excuse me, Mrs. Callendar, I have affairs of my own to attend to which cause me some anxiety."

"Let me assist your memory, Mr. Limore, and I will leave you to your affairs. On the date that I have referred to you were on your way to the railway station at Exmore, to catch the night express from the North to London."

As a hint that his time was valuable the shipowner had hitherto remained standing. He now took his customary seat, and began to listen with some interest. Mrs. Callendar had produced her effect on him already.

"It was absolutely necessary," she proceeded, "that you should be on board your ship in the London Dock at nine o'clock the next morning. If you had lost the express, the vessel would have sailed without you."

"The expression of his face began to change to surprise."

"Who told you that?" he asked. "You shall hear directly. On your way into the town, your carriage was stopped by an obstruction on the high road. The people of Exmore were looking at a house on fire."

"But heaven! Are you the lady?" She held up her hand in satirical protest.

"Gently, sir! I suspected me just now of wasting your valuable time. Don't rashly conclude that I am the lady, until you find that I am acquainted with the circumstances."

"Is there no excuse for my failing to recognize you?" Mr. Limore asked.

"We were on the dark side of the burning house; you were fainting, and I—"

"And you," she interposed, "after saving me at the risk of your own life, turned a deaf ear to my poor husband's entreaties, when he asked you to wait till I had recovered my senses."

"Your poor husband! Surely, Mrs. Callendar, he received no serious injury from the fire?"

"The firemen rescued him under circumstances of peril," she answered, "and at his great age he sank under the shock. I have lost the kindest and best of men. Do you remember how you parted from him—burnt and bruised in saving me? He liked to talk of it in his last illness."

"At least," he said to her, "you tell me the name of the brave man who has preserved my wife from a dreadful death. You threw your card to him out of the carriage window and away you went at a gallop to catch your train! In all the years that have passed I have kept that card, and have vainly inquired for my brave sea-captain. Yesterday I saw your name on the list of speakers at the Mansion House. Need I say that I attended the meeting? Need I tell you now why I come here and interrupt you in business hours?"

She held out her hand. Mr. Limore took it in silence, and pressed it warmly.

"You have not done with me yet," she resumed, with a smile. "Do you remember what I said of my errand, when I first came in?"

"You said it was an errand of gratitude."

"Something more than gratitude which only says, 'Thank you,'" she added. "Before I explain myself, however, I want to know what you have been doing, and how it was that my enquiries failed to trace you after that terrible night."

The appearance of depression which Mrs. Callendar had noticed at the public meeting showed itself again in Mr. Limore's face. He sighed as he answered her.

"My story has his right," he said; "it is soon told. I cannot wonder that you failed to discover me. In the first place, I was not captain of my ship at that time; I was only mate. In the second place, I inherited some money, and ceased to lead a sailor's life. In less than a year from the date of the fire, you will now understand what obstacles were in the way of your tracing me. With my little capital I started successfully in business as a ship-owner. At the time, I naturally congratulated myself on my own good fortune. We have known, Mrs. Callendar, what the future has in store for us."

He stopped. His handsome face hardened—as if he was suffering and concealing pain. Before it was possible to speak to him, there was a knock at the door. Another visitor, without an appointment, had called; the clerk appeared again, with a card and a message.

"The gentleman begs who will see him, sir. He has something to tell you which is too important to be delayed."

Hearing the message, Mrs. Callendar rose immediately.

"It is enough for to-day that we understand each other," she said. "Have any engagement to-morrow, after the hours of business?"

"None."

She pointed to her card on the writing-table.

"Will you come to me to-morrow evening at that address? I am like the gentleman who has just called; I, too, have my reason for wishing to see you."

He gladly accepted the invitation. Mrs. Callendar stopped him as he opened the door for her.

my life," he said. "I am not even in love."

She left him with a little sigh. It sounded like a sigh of relief.

Ernest Limore was thoroughly puzzled. What could be the old lady's object in ascertaining that he was still free from a matrimonial engagement? If the idea had occurred to him in time, he might have alluded to her in music life, and might have asked if she had children. With a little tact he might have discovered more than "Mrs. She had described her feeling toward him as passing the ordinary limits of gratitude; and she was evidently rich enough to be above the importunities of a mercenary motive. Did she propose to brighter those dreary prospects to which he had alluded in speaking of his own life? When he presented himself at her home the next evening, would she introduce him to a charming daughter?

He smiled as the idea occurred to him.

"An appropriate time to be thinking of my chances of marriage!" he said to himself. "In another month I may be a ruined man."

The Bad and Worthless are never invited or courted. This is especially true of family medicine, and it is positive proof that the remedy is of the highest value. As soon as it has been tested and proved by the whole world that Hop Bitters is the purest, best and most valuable family medicine on earth, many imitations sprang up and began to steal the credit of the press and the people of the country had expressed the merits of H. B., and in every way trying to induce suffering invalids to use their stuff instead, expecting to make money on the credit and good name of H. B. Many others started no trams put up in similar style to H. B., with variously named Hop Bitters, using the word "Hop" or "Hops" were used in a way to induce people to believe they were the same as Hop Bitters. All such pretended remedies or cures, no matter what their style or name is, and especially those with the word "Hop" or "Hops" in their name or in any way connected with them or their name, are imitations or counterfeits. Beware of them. Touch none of them. Use nothing but genuine Hop Bitters, with a branch of either of green Hops on the white label. Trust nothing else. Druggists and dealers are warned against selling imitations or counterfeits.

WHEN THE VITAL CURRENTS is vitiated from any cause, scorbatic blemishes in the shape of pimples, sores and blotches soon begin to disfigure the skin. In such a case the most effective medicine is Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure, which expels impurities from the blood as well as regulates digestion, the bowels, liver and kidneys.

An explosion occurred in a coal mine at Pocahontas, Va., on Thursday last, and all the lives of whom there were 120, were killed.

Names, Facts and Figures. Will be cheerfully furnished by the proprietors of Burdock Blood Bitters, regarding the many certificates of wonderful cures made by that medicine in chronic diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys, revealing proof that is beyond the possibility of dispute by the most incredulous.

The troops under General Graham captured the camp of Omar Dey, near Thursday and killed 4,000 of the enemy. The British had 70 killed and 100 wounded.

LUDINGTON, Mich., Feb. 2, 1884. I have sold Hop Bitters for four years and there is no medicine that surpasses them for bilious attacks, kidney complaints and many diseases incident to this malarial climate.

H. T. ALEXANDER. The annual report of the Dominion Minister of the Interior shows a material falling off in homestead and pre-emption grants and sales of land in the Northwest during the past year.

Johnson's Anodyne Lincture is richly worth $1 a bottle in certain cases. For instance, in cases of croup, whooping cough and asthma when the sufferer is almost dead for want of breath and something is required to act instantly. It costs only 25 cents.

Rascal! That word on the lips of a woman, addressed to a too daring man, often means—angel.

It should be Investigated. If any of our readers are suffering from chronic disease of the stomach, liver, kidneys, or blood, they should investigate the merits of Burdock Blood Bitters. It is making some of the most remarkable cures on record.

"The Mountaineer" Excited. An employee at the Asylum here drew a fifth of the second capital prize of $25,000, in the Grand Drawing of the Louisiana State Lottery, last Tuesday, February 12th, and not the whole $25,000 as the newspapers and he would like to have it. We would give the name of the lucky man, but don't know whether he cares about having his name published. The excitement around Morganton, N. C., and the eagerness with which the newspapers were scanned to find the name of the fortunate ticket holder of No. 90,383, revealed the fact that numbers of our citizens who would never have been suspected of interest in lotteries, held tickets in the Louisiana State Lottery at New Orleans. The 16th drawing will take place on Tuesday, April 8th, when $250,000 will be scattered in prizes under Gov. Beaufort and Early's management. All inquiries will be given by M. A. Dampier, New Orleans, La., on application.—Morganton (N. C.) Mountaineer, Feb. 20, 1884.

Every Spring. HOW AN AFFLICTED ANNUAL VISITOR WAS DRIVEN FROM A WEARY WOMAN. Plain and simple mechanics are not liable to get out of order. Complicated machines, intended not only to keep the wheels of life, but to mark the movements of the moon and stars, are certain to need frequent repairs. Husband and father often fail to see that their wives and daughters are more delicately organized than themselves, requiring corresponding care when they are well and assistance when they are ill. Yet how better for woman's line system is a trustworthy medicine, ready at all times for use, than a dabble tinkering by semi-educated local practitioners.

"Every Spring," said the wife of a well known employer of the Grand Trunk Railway, Montreal. "I have been for some years past troubled with nervous debility and weakness. It was a burden which so many women are called upon to bear, although none the lighter for that."

"Advice and doing to be sure, I had in plenty; still, on each spring, my sickness came as regularly as the birds and blossoms."

"You seem better now."

"Oh yes! I consider myself almost as well as usual, and it came about in this way. A lady living on St. Catharines was this city, commended to my attention by a friend. I tried it. It gave me strength and life. My sister, living in Montreal, whose disease was nearly the same as mine, was equally benefited by the same thing."

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE

ADAMS, N. Y., Jan. 20, 1882. Dr. J. J. Kendall & Co., Gents: Having used a bottle of your Kendall's Spavin Cure with great success, I thought I would let you know the work it has done for me. I was afflicted with a spavin on my right hind leg in July, 1881, and it was so bad that I could not get on my feet. I tried all the remedies I could get, but they all failed to do me any good. I had a very large horse, and I was very much distressed. I had a very large horse, and I was very much distressed. I had a very large horse, and I was very much distressed.
