Manning said he was a scion of a noble family, and was known as "Lord" Manning. Of excellent education, for the last ten years he had been employed in a clerical capacity by various public officials in Queens county. It is related of Manning that when he arrived here he was worth nearly half a million dollars. He rented expensive suites of rooms in different hotels, installed his friends in them, and spent money recklessly. When he became penniless Harry Hill, who knew his family in England, gave him employment on a small steamboat he ran from New York to Flushing. [This is the tug Flushing, now owned in St. John and at the time ran as a pleasure boat.] Hill fitted him out in a gorgerous naveal uniform, and for a time Manning, who were long Dundreary whiskers, was a conspicuous feature of the boat's daily trips.

who Selis Seventeen Verses for a Nickel.

(Worcester, Mass, Telegram, Sth Inst.)

Arthur E. Belyta, probably the youngest poet laureate in the world, is visiting Worcester. He came unannounced and his departure will be as unostentations, for Arthur does not seek the plaudits of literary critics. During his sizy in Worcester he is reciting in the hotels to those who care to listen to his verses. Some don't. White seeking remuneration, he is willing to sell his poetry at the low market price of 17 verses for a nickel.

Arthur E. Belyea is but 17 years old, and comes from poor but honest parents. He is his family's first offense in the poetry line. At the age of it he entered the field of literary effort in his native town, Carletton, N. B. His parents, like those of many another talented youth, were averse to his chosen occupation, and wanted in their ignorance to put him to honest work. But the divine spark burned within Arthur's breast, and would not be put out. In his proposed to the populace, but among the newspaper men of St. John were unbiased critics who saw the reflected honor in which their town might shine through this humble medium.

There was also another stimulus to Arthur's muse. In St. John, of which Carleton forms a part, was a poet of ancient and undisputed talent by name John Callahan McCarthy. For years John had held the poet that he is, for I can write a poem twice as long in half the time." So it proved; but in their rivalry prices were cut, and the trade of poesy became very dult.

Disgusted with his fellow townsmen, Arthur shook the dust of the place from his feet. It was a poor place, he said, that could not support two poets. Having heard the saying concerning the prophet and his trade there, and in six months returned to strade there, and in six months returned to saying concerning the prophet and his trade there, and in six months recurred to him a license to ignore the common canons of the condition of the press for the versatility of the saying concerning the prophet and his trade the tional calamity or festival. Kipling refers to him in a magazine article as a coming man, and the judgment of the famous man has been proven sound.

Mr. Belyea has come, but Worcester cannot claim him long. The great world is seeking him, and he is too great to ignore the call.

The Holy Communion service is an essential part of the coronation ceremony. George IV. made an attempt to cut down the religious portion of the ceremony as much as possible, but the Duke of Wellington and Lord Liverpool informed his Majesty, after a conference with the Archbishop of Canterbury (Manners Sutton) and the Bishop of London (Howley) that if there was only to be a state function, without an adequate sermon, there should be no coronation at all.

It is probable, however, that certain parts of the ceremony will be curtailed next June, and the homage of all the lords spiritual and temporal will be very properly omitted, as it would be a dreadfully long and wearisome affair. The sermon which is to be preceded by the Architecture of York will not preached by the Archbishop of York will not exceed ten minutes in length. Handel's magnificent coronation anthems, "Zadok the Priest" and "The King Shall Rejoice," will be included in the service.

Her Former Boston Coworkers Are Grief-Stricken - For a Year She Has Been at the Head of Her New Post.

MONTREAL, Jan. 9 .- There is an element of romance in the announced engagement of Miss Hilda Cudlip of St. John, N. B., to R. M. Davey of Montreal.

The marriage, which will take place n this city shortly, will be the culmination of a long courtship. Miss Cudlip, who in religion is known as Sister Hilda, will renounce the order of St. Margaret to marry the man she loves. Miss Cudilp, who belongs to a well-known St. John, N. B., family, entered the order of the Sisters of St. Margaret at the mother house of the community at Boston, several years ago, and later was transferred to Montreal. For more than a year she has been practically at the head of the order in this city, and as Sister Hilda was widely known in charitable circles. Mr. Davey, who is employed in the Dominion bridge works, is a well-known baritone, and frequently took part in musicales given for the inmates of St. Margaret's home. He was thus brought into association with Sister Hilda, and a strong attachment resulted. Sister Hilda, after persuasion, agreed to give up her work in the order to become a bride.

THEY REFUSE TO TALK. (Boston Globe.)

Grief and chagrin beclouded the usually placid countenances of the Mis sion church of St. John the Evangelist. on Bowdoin street., and at the St. Margaret home, on Louisburg square, yesterday afternoon.

The cause was the report, undoubted at both places, that Sister Hilda, known to the world as Miss Hilda Cudlip, was about to break her yows of celibacy, which she solemnly assumed when she entered the sacred order of St. Margaret years ago, to marry R. O. Montague Davey of Montreal of the Dominion bridge works. Miss Cudlip has been described as one of the most beautiful women in the city of ice palaces and winter carnivals. Moreover, she is said to wealthy. Thus her sacrifice in abandoning a life of luxury and worldly pleasure for one of devotion to the poor and unfortunate became more marked. The story is that she took the vows of the order six years since at the church of St. John the Evangelist, and after living some time at the mother house of the community, 17 Louisburg square, was transferred to Montreal. Neither confirmation or denial of this story could be had at either place. At the mission house inquiry was made for Rev. Edward Osborne, the rector, but he was said to be in Torento. An assistant was seen, however, and the reporter's mission explained, but the only answer elicited

"I am very sorry, but I cannot give you any information. Besides, I would not if I could. I did not even know her surname before. I only knew there was a Sister Hilda."

"Then she was here, and entered the order of St. Margaret in this church?"

"I cannot tell you anything," was the response. "We feel very sorry for the report which we have heard, and do not want anything more published about it. I hope you will not print or get anything. It is all very unpleasant to us." The manner of refusal was as positive as the language. The curate was all the time edging toward the door. with hat and cane in hand, and as the reporter passed out he accompanied him up the hill as far as the corner, bowed "good day" and returned toward the church. At the home of the Sisters of St. Margaret the preliminary question of the reporter was not so full or explicit. He was simply anxious to trace

"the family of a Miss Cudilp, who had probably been known at the home as Sister Hilda. The sister in charge firmly said she would not answer questions of any kind.

She did explain, however, that it was "all very distressing," thus revealing her full acquaintance with the subject.

NEW SPLIT AMONG BRITISH LIBERALS.

Herbert Paul Foreshadows Formation of Fresh Group of Dissentients

Sir Edward Grey in Lead - He Practically Holds a Pistol at Head of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman

(Cor. N. Y. Herald.)

LONDON, Jan. 9.-Sir Edward Grey's speech at Newcastle is ominous of still further disunion in the li-eral party. Sir Edward's tone is always suave and courteous. His speeches are models of the way in which difficult and delicate controversies should be conducted by a gentleman, but in point of fact he holds a pistol at the head of his leader, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, while even scrupulously avoiding mention of him.

Sir Edward distinctly announces that he adopts Lord Rosebery's Chesterfield speech as a whole, and will not consent to depart from it on any important point. Now, Lord Rosebery is not and doesn't profess to be the leader of the . liberal party. He voluntarily retired from that position in 1896. Even if he could, he would not resume it. Sir Edward Grey therefore calls upon the acknowledged leader of the opposition in the house of commons to follow and obey a man who has no recognized authority at all. This is fatal to discipline. Without some kind of discipline no party can exist. It is a great mistake, no doubt, to draw the bonds too tightly. The liberals have always claimed for themselves more latitude in this respect than is customary with the conservatives. It is natural they should. for, as some wise man remarked long ago, there are many methods of moving on and only one method of standing still. But at the same time there must be a limit to individual caprice

if the system of government by party is to continue. The liberal imperialists are in danger of passing that limit, if they have not passed it already. Their tactics, if they may be inferred from Sir Edward's language, as I presume they may, are pretty plain. They are waiting for Henry Campbell-Bannerman's speech at St. James' hall next Monday. If Sir Henry then and there falls into line with Lord Rosebery they will follow him: if not, they will go their way, or, rather, Lord Rosebery's way.

If Sir Henry submitted to such humiliation as that, he would be a leader merely in name.

We must then be prepared for a new group of dissentient liberals, such as was founded in 1886 after the introduction of the first home rule bill.

Sir Edward Grey is something more than a private member. Although he has never been in the cabinet, he held an important office in the administraan important office in the administra-tion. He has attended those private meetings of former members which are essential to the proper conduct of public business. Whether he will at-tend them any more seems doubtful. If he goes, Mr. Asquith will probably go with him. HERBERT PAUL.
