

FIND HIDDEN FORTUNE.
VIENNA, March 11.—The hidden fortune in a piece of old furniture has turned up in Vienna with unusually dramatic setting.

One of the many families who live by the gradual sale of antique family possessions decided to sell a very old desk. The daughter and a friend were removed it to a waiting wagon, when the well-known secret compartment opened at the proper cue and disclosed a pile of gold coins.

In the course of nearly all Europe, and some of ancient date, they represent 5,000,000 present Austrian crowns.

Strength and Weakness of the Harding Cabinet

President Harding's backbone, his refusal to be dictated to by any clique or faction within his party, is demonstrated to the satisfaction of many journalistic observers by his first official act, the selection of his cabinet. Noting that three outstanding figures, Mr. Hughes as secretary of state, Mr. Hoover as secretary of commerce, and Mr. Wallace as secretary of agriculture, were chosen in the face of formidable opposition, the independent New York Weekly Review thinks that "the time has come when one may regard the charge that Mr. Harding was a mere puppet in the hands of the 'senatorial clique' as definitely disproved." The New York Evening Mail (Ind.) thinks that it is "a cabinet that spells America about as accurately as any other group of men likely to be gathered around a president's council table." On the other hand, the Omaha World-Herald (Ind.) says that the Harding cabinet announcements "dilute, to the Volsteadian measure of one-half of one per cent, the lively hopes that were aroused when we were assured that a Republican Administration would rally the best minds of the country to the public service." The Philadelphia North American (Progressive) says that "It would be an extravagance to call the new cabinet great, but no less absurd to assume that it is not capable of good service."

THE LITERARY DIGEST this week, March 12, in its leading article presents all angles of public opinion upon the strength and weakness of the Harding cabinet, and gives a brief biography of each member of it, with his photograph.

THE LURE OF LENIN YOUNG AND BRILLIANT OLGA GOROKHOFF

Has Written Book "Visions of a Communist World," Which Her Powerful Lover Is Circulating Among the Soldiers.

London, March 10.—Brilliant, beautiful, almost girlish in appearance, and a born adventuress, is an intimate friend's opinion of the charms of Olga Gorokhoff, the mysterious woman whose influence over Lenin is threatening rapidly to disrupt the Bolshevik regime.

The Lady-Commissary Gorokhoff, as she is known to her friends, or the "Red Raspoutine," the significant nickname which she has earned from her enemies, is today the most intriguing and talked-of personality in Russia, if not in the whole of Europe.

Accepted Large Bribe. Lenin is completely under her sway. Violent dissensions have occurred among the People's Commissaries over the "Red Raspoutine," but still she continues in her meteoric career. Early in November, Lunacharsky, at a meeting of the council of commissaries, violently reproached Lenin for protecting her, but without effect. Charged with accepting a bribe of half a million rubles from a religious society as consideration for protecting the relics of orthodox saints, this amazing adventuress calmly refused point-blank to appear before the commission of inquiry.

The daughter of a humble peasant of the Ukraine, even in the underground days of Czarism, with her unique beauty and gifted personality, Olga Gorokhoff compelled public attention. Her writings were acclaimed by Maxim Gorky; her beauty attracting the attention even of the fastidious court at the Tsarsko-Selo. In fact, an invitation to the Imperial Palace already had been extended to her, when it was discovered by the secret police that the fair Olga was consorting with a dangerous group of anarchists.

Seemingly by a miracle she escaped Bilioussness. Means too much bile left in the blood by a deranged liver. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills set the liver right and biliousness and headaches disappear. One pill a dose. 25c. a box, all dealers.

banishment to the salt mines of Siberia. In the new Russia of today, while Olga numbers among her devoted admirers the most powerful chiefs of the Soviets, she has made many dangerous enemies.

She is feared and hated. One of these days there may be an unpleasant accident, and she will disappear again; long-winded speeches, she is said to be rapid and effective in Russia nowadays, and as heretofore there are many who think her a danger to the cause.

Her personality is strangely akin to that of Raspoutine, the ex-horse-stealer from Pokrovsky, whose sinister influence was to cost the czar his life and throne.

The "Red Raspoutine" is a unique type of Russian beauty. Unlike her somewhat burly compatriots, she is slim and graceful of figure, with tiny hands and beautiful feet. Of dark olive, almost swarthy, complexion and raven black hair, she has glittering black eyes, the fascination of which, it is said, no man is able to resist.

In this respect again she is very similar to Raspoutine. The notorious monk owed his unique success to the curious hypnotic influence he was able to wield over women of every class and age.

Olga Gorokhoff has the same gift—if it can be called a gift. Her hypnotic powers, perhaps, are even greater, more ambitious, utterly reckless, and a born schemer, men and women alike pawns in her eyes to be moved at pleasure to and fro across the chessboard of her life's game to a brilliant climax that aspires to nothing less than the dictatorship of the great republic.

Olga Gorokhoff intends to be the first woman dictator in history. Already she is a power in the land.

Her Meeting With Lenin. Her meeting with Lenin was dramatic. Invited by some obscure commission to attend a conference, Lenin arrived with the mistaken idea that it was another and more important event. Bored to distraction at last, with their long-winded speeches, he was about to go when he caught sight of the Gorokhoff. It was a crisis in his life.

Immediately they became the closest of friends. The feeling grew into something stronger. They became inseparable. Lady-Commissary Gorokhoff, as she was now styled, was furnished with a luxurious suite of rooms in the former convent of the Virgin. Here she set up her salon, with all the pomp and ceremony of a princess. Soviet commissaries who attended were required to kiss her hands. She was made the recipient of presents of wonderful jewels to push the case for ambitious bureaucrats with the great man. Within three months she had amassed a small fortune.

Recently, when she was appointed curator of the Palace of Royard Romanoff, the luxurious home of one of the relatives of the late czar, the commissary in charge immediately addressed a letter to Lenin, refusing to be responsible for the historic treasures in the palace unless she was immediately removed. While the anarchist journal Vozvuz is denouncing Gorokhoff daily as a court-revolutionary agent, who has been commissioned to discredit and undermine Bolshevism, the "Red Raspoutine" has just written a book on present conditions in Russia, called "Visions of a Communist World," which, at the express order of Lenin is being circulated widely among the soldiers on the southern front.

Storm Clouds Gathering. "With the advent of Gorokhoff," said my informant in conclusion, "it would appear that the most intriguing chapter of the great tragedy is yet to be written. It will make very interesting reading—if anyone ever cares to write it."

"I can already see the storm clouds gathering on the horizon. There will be more plots, more intrigues, more bloodshed, yet more widespread destruction before the 'Red Raspoutine' is finished with."

"Personally, however, I am of the opinion that she has already gained too great a hold over to be overthrown by our susceptible people. The real danger is just how far her ambition lies. If, as it is being rumored, she aims at restoring the monarchy, with herself and her lover at its head, that will spell utter disaster. Meanwhile she may develop into the great power of the new Russia, if she can only learn to control that arrogant ambition of hers."

PHONOGRAPH SAVES AMERICAN WOMEN

Relief Workers Besieged by Turks in Out-of-Way Village.

New York, March 10.—A new use has been found for the talking machine. As an implement of warfare and a weapon of diplomacy it rivals the punch of Big Bertha and the wiles of Lloyd George. Such was the discovery made by six American relief workers besieged in the little town of Hadjin, Turkey, who arrived recently from the scene of the Turkish Nationalist uprising in Asia Minor.

When the Turkish troops occupied the hills surrounding Hadjin and opened fire on the little town, the Americans in the near east relief compound, just a mile out, raised the white flag of truce, and beside it was a white flag for neutrality, and hoped for the best. The worst happened. The Turks fired. For a whole afternoon they proceeded to fire, and then made a call. Their call was in the nature of an occupation and it lasted for something over nine weeks. The Americans were ordered to give up all their dreams—which was easy, as they hadn't any. They had only "Arabella," the talking machine.

the moment. "Arabella charmed them as nothing had in years. They could not be hostile. To be sure, they had momentary outbreaks, as when they killed one of our little orphans in a rage, and when they threatened all the Americans with instant death if weapons were found on the ground—and 'thaw themselves' were saving them there constantly—but once we got them under the magic power of the Arabella, they were mild as lambs.

"Still, it was a nerve-racking nine weeks before we were granted safe convey to take out of the danger zone. If Arabella had broken down we would have been lost, but our luck held on, and on the 28th day of the siege we were escorted, minus most of our baggage, from the firing line. I have often wondered what those Turks did with that talking machine after we left."
