Styles in visiting cards and note paper might almost be said to change with the seasons. The latest card has not changed in size, but it is neither the very thick board of long ago nor the recent very thin material; it is of moderate thickness, and pure white. Block type is growing in popularity every day, and promises to oust the script, which has held its own so long. Script of a rather larger and heavier style is still good form. Addresses are put either in the lower left or the lower right hand corner, and bolder and larger lettering is also used for this purpose.

When the fashionable woman goes abroad it is necessary, as well as convenient, that she should carry a traveling card. It is of ample size and quite whin. Across the top of the card is given in black type her full name. Just beneath this her city address in America is given, while in the right hand corner is the name of her banker in London or Paris, and in the left hand corner her cable address. This is a lot of information to put on a visiting eard, but those who have already traveled in foreign countries readily see the advantage of the plan. Cards designed for country use have the name and address of one's country place in the left hand corner; otherwise they are exactly like those for city use.

The latest note paper for out-of-town use is of an evid Menhistophelian red. It is of a heavy linen, and is much in vogue for informal mountain and seaside entertainments. This fad comes from London, where red paper was the rage last season. People with more canservative taste prefer some of the thinner papers in the beautiful, rich shades of blue remain popular, and pearl and gray tones are in greater demand than they have been for several seasons. Very small monograms stamped on a gold, silver or colored circle or other set design are the favorite embellishment. The paper for country use is plainly marked with the address, railroad stateon and telegraph or telephone station of the owner.

shows neither flower nor ngure stripe nor circle. It is semply an allover watered or moire ground, like a niece of silk or saft mooire and is brought out in all satisfactory tints and shades. Panels of shis moire paper used perpendicularly on a calcimined wall surface, the panels being defined with a narrow gilt moulding, afford an effective treatment for a drawing-room. A sample lately seen was in leaf-green moire paper, put on in up-and-down panels three-quarters of a yard wide on a wall surface tinted in a paler shade of green. The gilt mouldings that edged the panels were chased and ornamented the panels were chased and ornamented wall have discovered that the moire vould have discovered that the moire wall was buser and not silk.

Other new papers show the delicate exactness and finely wrought figures and flowers of the Louis XVI. broches and flowers of the Louis XVI. broches and flowers of the Louis XVI. broches and fire of the transmitted designs. A new treatment for these large-flowered marked by a white moulding and a frieze of marrow-striped paper of the two main colors of the pattern. A room decorated in lavender paper, in which fleurs de lis on an ivory ground forned the main coloring, had a very deep dado of lavender and cream striped paper, marked by a white moulding and a frieze of the same striped kevender and white paper above. By using dados of cither striped or patterns in flowered or figured wall paper may be employed successfully without determined from the size of the room.

The Queen's Jubiles Gown.

A lady correspondent writes: "As so many conflicting accounts have appeared of the dress worn by the Queen on June 22. 1897, it may be of interest to give a correct description, as the occasion is a historical one. Her Majesty's dress was pale gray silk richly embrodered with silver of the finest workmanship, not only on the panels of the skirt, which were six inches wide, but on the bodice as well. The basque was very fully trimmed with frills of fine black lace, as were the sleeves and the edge of the skirt. The bodice of the dress, however, was entirely covered by a black gauze cape, which had incrustations of beautiful white lace let in. These insertions gave an appearance of great lightness and coolness to the entire toilet. The bonnet was black and white, with a little silver introduced, and the shape was a very becoming one, the sides coming well down behind the ears over the soft white hair."—London Daily News.
