THE HERR LIEUTENANT.

THE HERR LIEUTENANT.

"" the Deuce of a Fellow, and German Society Pays Homage to Him.

The German Lieutenant is the German ande. He has few characteristics, however, in common with the American dude, searts the New York Star. He is, intelligent and manly. He wears no ultrashionable attire and talks no ultrashionable attire and talks no ultra-toreign grown. He has no yellow, top coats, nor life trousers, nor pot hats, nor patent ather shoes, nor big-headed cane. But ever is a red stripe on each of his trousers sg, a big imperial eagle on his helmet, red craps on his heavy ulster, spurs or his cots, and at his side a sword in a massive cabbard, which strikes the pavement at of curled front hair what a mighty fine curled front hair what a mighty fine fellow a Lieutenant of the Guards is. As soon as he enters the cafe his favorite waiter begins all sorts of feats of acrobatic politeness. He bows himself double whenever the Lieutenant turns a hair. He scurries around like mad after the military periodicals and shouts himself hoarse in ordering for the Herr Lieutenant the very best caviar, the freshest rolls and the strongest coffee which the cafe affords. He never addresses the Lieutenant as "you." That would be too disrespectful to a real Lieutenant, though it is good enough for men in bobtali coats and trousers without stripes. No, the waiter always asks: "Will the Herr Lieutenant kindly have sugar in his cofbillio coats and trousers without stripes, the waiter always asks: "Will the Herr leutenant kindly have sugar in his cofer will the Herr Lieutenant have a second beer or a two and one-half-cent of the sugar for three cents, or a perfine imported cigar for three cents, or a perfine imported cigar for four ceents, or a perfine imported cigar for three cents, or a perfine cents, or a perfine cigar for three cents, or a perfine cigar for three cents, or a perfine cigar for cigar for three cents, or a perfine cigar for cigar way for him, for he is a base man to bump gainst. He is keen to resent any incivil-ry, and the man who shoves him rudely, or cuts on his toes, is apt to bring up opposite thin with swords or pistois the next morn-ng in the Grunewald or Rosenthal. The clieutemant on this street parade, however, a not so busy admiring himself that he has these to challength the rights who admires to admire all the girls who adm erally a nobleman and a gentleman. He is always well educated and well informed concerning topica of the day. Long after entering the army, he frequently subscribes to university lecture courses, and appears in the lecture room regularly with his little leather bag full of notes, just as if he were an ordinary student. He reads a great deal about civil government, political conomy, Bismarck and the Hohenzollerans. He can say histocethe backward, and can cite fishakes-peare more appropriately than three-fourths of the Englishmen. He can quote Heine with the professor's pretty daughter or Roscher and Rau with the professor himself. He is cleverly venturesome, too, and, Roscher and Rau with the professor himself. He is cleverly venturesome, too, and, though he may not know the difference between knowledge and belief, he does not avoid bouts with old metaphysicians concerning the theories of Kant, Hegel and Schopenhauer. He is so superficially onniscient and nudacious, that his presence at a reception always ensures some one a good time. The criterion of the success of a German party is consequently the number of Liquitenants present.

Lieutenant usually terminates his triumphants social career by marrying a very plain woman. This is the reason: The lieuteutenant's life is an expensive one, as life in Germany goes. Three-cent cigars, wine and flowers, and actresses, social obligations, and an occasional hand at cards play ducks and drukes with his salary, which is little more than one third the salary of an American Lieutenant. If he has no private fortune he makes debts at every turn. These debts are piled up year after year. "An angel fies through the room and a Lieutenant pays his debts," is a German proverb. The German Governmenthas had, a life-long experience with the young Lieutenant pays his hing or two about his explosive habits. It has therefore forbidien him to marry unless he or his intended wife has money enough to support the family. When a Lieutenant's debts have become mountain high and troublesome, he begins to scurry around after a rich marriageable woman. Money is the one sinequa mon of his choice. A woman may be plain, stupid, errate within limits, or American; yet if she has money enough to put the Lieutenant square with the world after he has had his fling, he jumps at the chance to marry her. put the Lieutenant square with the world after he has had his fling, he jumps at the

IRON CHAIN MAKING:

RON CHAIN MAKING:

Hot and Noisy Work Requiring Consideration able Skill and Strength.

All readers have scen fron chains, though it is to be hoped that none of them will ever have to wear one. For all that, they may be giad to know something about the process of making them, a process thus described by the Pittaburgh Dispatch:

The first operation is the making of the links. The material comes in coils, each containing from eighty to one hundred and twenty feet of round fron rod, which is of uniform diameter and of various sizes, corresponding to the different styles of chains.

A piece of this wire is placed in the groove of a powerful machine, the wheel is started, a twisting motion imparted, and the iron comes forth in a spiral roll, looking as the outer strand of a rope might if separated from the component parts.

The groove into which the iron is pressed, and the spindle-like arrangement about which the coil is formed, make the coil exactly uniform throughout, the iloks being the same distance apart, and of the same size. The machine does its work rapidly; but little time is consumed in converting the eighty or more feet of rod into shape for chain links.

a long sheet-iron trough, suspended as high as a man's head, one end being considerably lower than the other.

One end of the coil is then submitted to the operation of the cutting machine, which at a single blow strikes off enough of it for a chain link. The machine is regular and rapid in its motion. The workman has only to hold the iron in position, and from two hundred to two hundred and seventy-five links are cut every minute. They drop into a spout, and roll therefrom into a small cart, which is hauled away when full to the welding department.

So far all the work has been done without welding department.

So far all the work has been done without the agency of heat, but the chain can not be completed without the agency of fire. The final operation is welding the links together. Standing beside a furnace in which a hot natural gas fire is blasting, the workman seizes a plece of the white-hot metal with his tongs, places it on a die, and putting his footon a treadle causes a spring hammer to descend, giving shape to the link.

hammer to descend, giving snape to the link.

Two other turns and two more blows of the hammer, and the link is completely formed and welded together. Another piece is then taken from the fire, and the open end deftly slipped around the link just formed. It is then operated upon just as the first link was; another is added, then another; the chain is growing rapidly—so fast, indeed, that two feet or more of it has been finished before the red glow has died out of the first link welded.

Of the smallchain, which the workman is now making, the welding of three thousand links is considered a good day's work. More can be made of a smaller size, and less of a larger. It is not and noisy work.

SENTIMENT IN BUSINESS.

A Drummer Discovers a Fawnbroase with a Conselence.

I have had occasion to callon "my uncle" in almost every large city in the country," said the drummer to a New York Sun gossiper, and I'm teiling you St. Louis is the hardest place I ever struck. About six months ago I brought up there dead broke, and, while waiting to hear from the firm, I took a dress coatover to a pawn shop to get a loan of three or four dollars. It cost methirty dollars, and was almost new.

"How much do you want on dot?" asked the broker, who was an old mad.

"Oh, about four dollars." He stepped back, and heid up his hands in amazement and gasped:

"Because my brudder will be in here fry soon, and I doan like him to find you. He will look upon you ash crazy, and he may proceed to folence." "Why should I go out?"

New Use of Glycerine New Use of Glycerine.

Carpenters and other tool-users who keep up with the times now use a mixture of glycerine instead of oil for sharpening their edge tools. Oil, as is well known, thickens and smears the stone. The glycerine may be mixed with spirits in greater or less proportion, according as the tools to be sharpened are fine or coarse. For the average blade two parts of glycerine to one of spirits will suffice.

Admiration and Laughter.

Admiration and laughter are of such opposite natures that they are seldom created by the same person. The man of mirth is always observing the follies and weaknesses, the serious writer the virtues or crimes, of mankind; one is pleased with contemplating a fop, 've other a here; even from the same objects 'hey would draw different ideas.
