

The following is an extract from a letter dated St. Petersburg, March 2. I understand that it is currently reported in England that the Emperor is ill. If so, there is a great deal of method in his madness. His preparations for the war are made and directed with a cool determination which partakes much more of firm resolution than of wanton-headed obstinacy. It is true that he suffers not a little from erysipelas in the legs, and has been directed by his medical advisers to abstain from wearing his military boots. The Emperor, however, refuses to attend to those instructions, and is perpetually in motion, wearing his usual dress. In fact, his preparations are those of unwearied and unwearied activity. The most gigantic exertions are being made in the naval and military departments. It is stated without reserve, by those who are sufficiently well-informed, that the Czar will carry out the course which he commenced with the departure of the British and French envoys, and that whilst he loses no opportunity, and will not lose one which enables him to retort upon British subjects the treatment which he alleges he has received from the English government, he will pursue a directly opposite course towards the French.

FLAX GROWING.—The Lord Lieutenant has transmitted £1000 to the Royal Flax Improvement Society, at Belfast, to be expended in the practical instruction of flax growers, in the counties of Cork, Kerry, Clare, Tipperary, Galway, Mayo, Sligo, Leitrim, and Roscommon.

John Delany, the owner of the California emigrant ship, lost off the coast of Achill, and George M'Nally, the captain, were both found guilty, at the Mayo Assizes, of manslaughter, in having caused the death of 17 of the passengers. They were sentenced the former to 18 months' imprisonment and the latter to 9 months.

A NEW PROJECT.—In Constantinople a manufactory has been established for those fatal explosive balls of which so large a quantity has been of late imported into the East. They were discovered by an apothecary, and are said to be filled with some species of gas, or chloroform, and explode on falling upon or striking against any object. An experiment is said to have been made at Cherbourg with an old vessel, in the hold of which some thirty dogs were shut up, all of which were found dead within a few minutes after the ball had entered.

HOW TO RAISE THE WIND.—A wealthy Odessa merchant thought himself very generous when he subscribed 10,000 roubles towards the expenses of the war. The Emperor Nicholas, however, was of a different opinion, and gave orders that he should fully equip two cavalry regiments, and maintain them for two years.

The Admiralty have resolved to station ten brig-of-war off the east coast of Scotland, in order to protect it from privateers during the continuance of war.

The hire of the steamer Himalaya alone for the conveyance of troops amount, it is stated, to £17,000 a month, whilst others are engaged at nearly a corresponding magnitude.

Telegraphic despatches received from Odessa, dated the 6th of March, state that all vessels loading there will be allowed to complete their cargoes.

EARTHQUAKE IN CALABRIA.—Loss of 3,000 souls. There have been, in Calabria, a succession of earthquakes, with a fearful loss of life. The castle of Cosenza has been entirely destroyed, and all the garrison buried in the ruins. A village, containing 900 inhabitants, near the same place, has likewise, with its whole population, been destroyed. Up to the last accounts the loss of life was calculated to amount to upwards of 3,000 souls. The shock was felt slightly in Naples, but did not create any damage. The weather is unusually cold for this season of the year.

STEAM FLOUISHING.—Lord Willoughby d'Ereshay's steam plough is now completed, and available for general use. Any gentleman who wishes to see it in operation may do so on application by letter, two days previously, to Mr. Scott, Edinham Bournes, Lord Willoughby wishes it to be understood that free permission is given either to take drawings of the machinery, or to make any use that may be desired of the invention gratis.

DEATH OF SIR JAMES WYLIE.—A WHITFALL FOR THE CZAR.—Sir James Wylie, for so long a time the chief physician at the Russian Court, has just died at St. Petersburg. He is reported to have bequeathed the entire of his very large fortune to the Emperor of Russia. Sir James Wylie was a Scotchman, born in 1786. He entered the Russian service as military surgeon in 1807; was appointed physician to the imperial court, in 1798; surgeon in ordinary to the Emperor Paul, and physician to the heir apparent in 1799; director of the medical department of the minister of war in 1813; physician in ordinary to the Emperor Alexander in 1814; and lastly inspector general of the Board of Health in the Russian army. He was also president of the Russian medical committee of the minister of war; director of the Russian medical department of the imperial court; and a privy councillor of the Czar. Sir James Wylie was knighted at Ascott Heath Races, in 1814, by George IV., then Prince Regent, and was subsequently created a baronet at the request of the Emperor Alexander, on his departure from England. The wealth of the deceased is stated to have been very considerable, and that he should bestow it upon the Czar, instead of allowing the money to pass to his relations, has given rise to much astonishment, and doubtless to considerable regret amongst those of his own blood.

HASZARD'S GAZETTE. Saturday, April 8, 1854.

On Wednesday evening last, the most numerous audience ever remembered to have been present at in Prince Edward Island was assembled in the Temperance Hall, for the purpose of listening to a lecture from the Rev. Mr. Narway, on the subject of "The Legal Prohibition of the Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors." The G. W. F. of the Sons of Temperance—William Hoard, Esq.—was in the Chair, assisted by the President of the Charitotown Total Abstinence Society, Mr. Lawson. A number of the members of both Houses of the Legislature were present, by invitation. It is not our intention to give any analysis of the lecture, as it will be shortly printed and published; but this we will say, that a more logical, comprehensive and convincing discourse, logically correct in its inferences, and at the same time abounding in pathos and nervous energetic appeals to the patriotism and good sense of the hearers, was never listened to in Prince Edward Island, and could not well be surpassed elsewhere.

After the Chairman had, in a short but appropriate speech, invited the audience to a free discussion of the subject of the Liquor Traffic, Mr. Hoard arose and addressed the audience; and though the good old gentleman threw no greater light on the question, nor offered any thing novel in the way of reasoning, yet his observations—which were pertinent enough, as descriptive of the baneful effects arising from the immoderate use of intoxicating drinks—were well received, and a moral picture which he drew from the life, and was understood to be the son of a widow having perished at his mother's door, from the effects of indulgence at the tavern, had a considerable effect.

Mr. Lawson stated, that he was one of those alluded to in the lecture, who feared that if the Maine Liquor Law was carried out in all its strictness, it would tend to introduce the use of opium, and other stimulants. There was, he was afraid, in all people, at all times, and in every quarter of the globe, an increasing desire after stimulants, that would be satisfied in some way or other. As far as respected himself, he wished to see intemperance put down; but there certainly was, in his opinion, a great difference between the use and abuse of wine and other stimulants; and the grand question for the Legislature was, whether the latter had increased to that alarming extent, that it was necessary to put a legal restraint upon the former. There was one circumstance that almost, if not altogether, rendered it imperative on the legislature to enact a law, and that was, that the adjoining Province of Nova Scotia had passed a prohibitory law, which, when in operation, would have a tendency to throw into Prince Edward Island the considerable liquor trade which would be there in excess. His objections to passing a law similar to the Maine Liquor Law had been, in a great measure, done away with; and he trusted, that if the legislature did pass such a law, it would sufficiently guard against any unconstitutional interference with the rights of private individuals.

Robert Mooney, Esq., M. P. P., after some complimentary remarks upon the fairer portion of the audience, and some of those exhibitions of humor and drollery which are inseparable from all he says, and form a part of the character of the man, remarked, that he was for free will; that he disliked compulsion in any shape. It was all very well for those who, like the numerous and respectable audience that he saw before him, approved of total abstinence, to practice it; but he deprecated legislative interference upon the subject. The Sons of Temperance had deservedly received much praise by means of a resolution; let them continue that course, and it would do them more honor than assailing legal compulsion—and they certainly deserved credit for being the means of the erection of such a splendid building as they were then assembled in—which was alike a public convenience and an ornament to the town. But, supposing the advice before him comprised the majority of the inhabitants of the island, and they were Catholics, who conscientiously thought that people ought to abstain from eating flesh on Fridays—what would he say, if they were to seek to compel, by legal enactment, every one else to do the same? The people whose representative he was had manifested no desire that such a law should be passed; and until they did so, he should oppose it. The first way, he said, would be, for the present administration to dissolve the Assembly, and call a new House; and then the sense of the people on the question would be ascertained. After several other remarks, chiefly of a humorous cast, the hon. member resigned his seat amid some applause.

Mr. Archibald remarked, that when the Petitions were presented, Mr. Mooney would find the names of a great number of his constituents among the signatures.

Mr. McAnland observed, that the Rev. lecturer had given the amount of capital expended in the purchase by artisans of intoxicating drink; but, great as was the amount, it fell far short of what was lost to the country, in the shape of labor which the same body of men were incapacitated from expending in consequence of indulging in excess. He further observed, that however honorable and praiseworthy it was in the legislature to advance the cause of education by means of free schools, the work was but half done, unless they protected the rising generation from the baneful effects of intemperance; for it is an acknowledged fact, said he, among the most intelligent of the neighborhood, that those who are most likely to become good legislators, lawyers, doctors, divines, or eminent in any branch of science and art, from their peculiarly early arrangement of faculties, are those who quit most fall victims to the use of wine and alcoholic drinks.

The Hon. the Attorney General rose, and, after some preliminary and complimentary remarks upon the lecture, stated, that the question principally lying upon the right of taking legislative action to compel people to their own good; and yet—said the hon. and learned gentleman—we do so every day, or what is tantamount to it. In passing the Education Act, we do not say to every parent that you shall educate your child, but we say, whether you do or not, you shall pay for his education; and we thus in a manner compel him to confer one of the greatest of all blessings upon his offspring; so with regard to the proposed prohibition of the liquor traffic, it does not say that you shall not use wine or spirits, but that you shall not sell them, and thereby tempt your weaker minded neighbors to indulge to the ruin of himself and family. It had been said, that he was a slow man, and it might be true; but at any rate he had taken time to ponder, and meditate upon the subject of this night's lecture; and he was in a way to the enlightenment of some of the neighboring Republics.

On adopting the Maine Liquor Law, when the neighboring British Provinces were copying their example; when Statesmen of profound research and acknowledged talents, had given their sanction,—he could no longer refuse his assent to the principle. [Much applause.] It had been said, that it would work considerable injury to the revenue, and occasion the loss of £2000 or £3000. There would be a depreciation of revenue, for a year or two, exceptionally; but it was known that, not long since, the House of Assembly had, without the usual Supplies for a year; not great evil, however, accrued to the Colony therefrom; and if the entire public expenditure could be dispensed with, without any permanent evil, why not—[for the accomplishment of so much good—] dispense with the revenue derived from duty on wines and spirits? But he thought, with the Rev. lecturer, that in the course of a very short time the revenue would be diminished, and, owing to the increase of wealth and labor, be augmented in a greater degree than it had been diminished. Mention had been made of the necessity of remembering those who had expended capital in the trades which would be destroyed by the passing of a prohibitory law. Were it necessary, he would be most willing to vote for any such remission; but he would vote so far as to borrow, on the credit of the Colony, some hundreds of pounds for that purpose, if it should be considered absolutely necessary to ensure the passing of the Act, and bear any odium that might attach to such a course. [Here the audience manifested a cordial concurrence with the sentiments of the hon. and learned gentleman.] After many other observations, which we regret to say have escaped our memory, the Hon. Attorney General stated his readiness to concur in the passing of an Act which, while it should prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors, should afford sufficient security against the unconstitutional invasion of domestic rights.

Hon. Mr. Hoard stated, that the hearing of the lecture had done away with many of his previous objections to the passing of a prohibitory law; and he would only say, that when the subject came before the House of a gentleman who has hitherto been considered in this island, I believe, as a kind of authority on monetary matters. And in the next, it is prominently absurd, as expressing the hon. gentleman's admiration of a system and state of matters which have no foundation in fact, and exist only in his own imagination. Your reporter has made the hon. gentleman say—"Throughout Scotland (and I am a great admirer of their management of all pecuniary matters) there are no Government Savings Banks." Now, Sir, will you believe it?—there is a Government Savings Bank in every town in Scotland with which I am acquainted,—and that embraces nearly the whole of them. Your reporter further makes the hon. gentleman say that "they consider money locked up in Savings Banks as so much dead stock." But what is the truth? Why, Sir, so little do they merit the appellation of the hon. member, that they actually merit weekly, and in some cases daily, (to London,) the balance of deposits paid into the Savings Banks, to be invested by the Government in the public securities of Great Britain; and in place of considering it dead stock,—as the hon. gentleman terms it,—they call it active stock, for which they receive 3½ per cent. interest per annum from Government.

As our fact is twenty contrary assertions, coming from any authority, however respectable, I beg to inclose for publication the Report of the Annual Meeting of the National Security Savings Bank of Glasgow, for 1853, held on the 9th January last; and also copy of the balance sheet for that year; from which you will see that "the pair Scotch bodies" of that city so little appreciate the hon. gentleman's "true commercial principle," that they have actually lodged with Government at that date no less a sum than £261,018 16s. 10d. sterling, on which they have received last year £17,384 4s. of interest,—a tolerable proof that it is not dead stock.

It is much to be regretted that men of standing and respectability in society,—and more particularly members of the Legislature,—should feel forth to the public, under the sanction and influence of their names, statements and opinions calculated to poison the minds of the industrial classes, and prejudice them against the advantages to be derived from an institution which has shed incalculable blessings on thousands, in every community where it has been established.

7th April, 1854.

[We are unable to publish in this No. the whole Report furnished by our correspondent. We select from it the annexed table:—]—Ed. H. GAR.

The Bank deposits are now $2,337 in number, the whole, with few exceptions, belonging to the industrious and laboring classes.

The funds of the Bank are invested as follows:—

Deposited with the Government,	2,091,018 16 10
In Western Bank of Scotland,	2559 16 3
Total funds,	2,093,577 32 13
The amount due to depositors, as	633,447 14 2
before stated,	124 18 10
Leaving a free surplus of	1,459,910 8 1

The Government still allows interest at the rate of 2½ per cent. on the amount deposited with them, so that the Bank is enabled to continue the present rate of 3 per cent. to the depositors.
