CAUGHT AND CONFESSED.

olution of a Michigan Murder Mystery —The Assassin and His Victim

The Assasin and His Victim
Both Identified.

CHARLOTTE, Mich., Feb. 3.—City Marshal Ed. Bates, of Lansing, and Deputy Sheriff James Skinner landed in Charlotte, Eaton county, at midnight, with the supposed murderer of the young girl found in Grand River, near Dimondale. The ferreting out of the crime and the arrest are due to the clever detective work of Bates. The girl was Nellie Griffin and she left Coldwater last Wednesday with a man calling himself Hendershot. She was 12 years of age, with dark blue eyes and very fair complexion. She was sent to the State public school three years ago. Last Tuesday an old man, who gave his name as Hendershot, a farmer of Parma, Jackson county, called at the school and asked for a girl to work in his family. He answered every question so satisfactorily and seemed so amiable and pleasant that on Wednesday Supt. Newkirk let him have the Griffin girl, after wiring the county agent at Jackson to keep an eye on her welfare.

The body found in Grand River corresponded to the description of Nellie Griffin. The officers having learned of Nellie's leaving the school as stated above, wired to Jackson, and finding that no such man as Hendershot lived in Parma they at once drove to Dimondale and arrested Edward Canfield, an old farm hand employed by C. Harrison, near Dimondale, who answered to the description of the man who was seen on the train with the girl, and who got off with her at Dimondale.

After being locked up the prisoner confessed his real name was Russel! C. Canfield. He went to Jonesville Tuesday, and then to Coldwater, and said he told Supt. Newkirk he was from Parma, and asked for a girl. He did not see the girl until she was brought to him by the school employes at the depot. When he left the train at Dimondale he started for Harrison's house, but struck off through the wood and finally the two sat down on the log by the water, where the hody was found.

Dimondale he started for Harrison's louse, but struck off through the wood and finally the two sat down on the log by the water, where the body was found.

"The girl began to cry," he said, "and I threw her on the ground and choked her to death with one hand. She did not struggle or scream. After her death I took off her clothes and threw her into the hole where she was found. I did not outrage the girl and I have no idea why I killed her. I must have been insane." The murderer also added that no one was implicated in the crime. He took the clothes to Harrison's and buried them under the cowshed floor and then calmly went to bed.

"I wish I had been shot dead," he moaned at the end; "I don't know what made me do it."

A CHECKERED LIFE.

Five Times Married and Hangs Herself at Last.

CHICAGO, Feb. 3.—Further search of the papers left by Mrs. Catherine McKnight, the old lady who committed suicide by hanging yesterday, shows her life was made up of thrilling and romantic events. She had five husbands, and from three of them she secured divorces. During the civil war she was a persistent and troublesome spy, and many of her wild escapades are known. She was born in New Hampshire in 1830. Her maiden name was Catherine Williams. When but 18 year old she met Harry Wilson, a dashing young fellow, and fell in love with him. Her parents objected to the match and the pair eloped. When war was declared her young husband hurried to the front and not many months clapsed before Mrs. Wilson went after him. She was installed in the quarters of the New Hampshire regiment, and became the daughter of the regiment. During April, 1863, her husband was captured by the Confederates while on a secret mission and sent off to the Louisville prison. "The soldiers' lassie," as everybody called her, waited in vain for the return of her husband. It was many months before she learned his fate. She then decided to become a Union spy and go to Louisville, and if possible, obtain her husband's release. She spent many months about the prison in fattle efforts to have the 'young prisoner of war liberated.

One day she succeeded in securing a pass to the prison, and wearing a suit of men's

One day she succeeded in securing a pass to the prison, and wearing a suit of men's clothing beneath her garments she was conducted to her husband's cell. He hastily donned her garments and succeeded in pass-ing the walls, but before he had a chance to make good his escape he was shot and killed. Mrs. Wilson was tried and sen-tenced to death, but she succeeded in elud-

When the war was over she drifted about the country and in 1870 she married Patrick Dailey, a noted convict, but before she had lived with him a year he was caught while entering a house in Canada and sent to an English prison for a long term.

She secured a divorce from him, and in 1875 married another convict named Daniel Mathews. He also was caught for some of his deeds and sent to prison.

During 1879 she married William McDongal, a forger, and lived with him until 1881, when he died from the effects of a New Orleans policeman's bullet which he received while trying to escape arrest.

One year afterwards she married Joseph McKnight, her fifth and last husband. In less than two years she secured a divorce

BEHRING SEA.

The U. S. Supreme Court Grants Leave to File an Application in the Sayward Case.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 3.—The Supreme Court of the United States, contrary to the predictions of the most eminent lawyers who practice before it, has granted to the counsel representing the British Government and the Attorney-General of Canada leave to file an application for a writ of prohibition to prevent the District Court of Alaska from proceeding to carry out its decree of forfeiture in the case of the schooner Sayward, libeled for unlawfully taking seals within the waters of Behring Sea. The rule is made returnable the second Monday in April. The preliminary question has thus been settled in favor of the owners of the schooner Sayward and the representatives of the British Government, and the case must now be discussed upon its merits.

The Supreme Court did not decide the favor of the owners of the schooner Sayward and the representatives of the British Government, and the case must now be discussed upon its merits.

The Supreme Court did not decide the point that the Court of Alaska was not a United States Court, but it indirectly rebuked counsel for having raised that point. The criticism is a little severe on the lawyers for the United States that too much argument has been spent on that point, for the language of this statute is clearly in the line of authority being given to the Supreme Court of the United States to issue writs of prohibition in admiralty and district courts in the United States to issue writs of prohibition in admiralty and district court of the United States to issue writs of prohibition in admiralty and district court in Halsaka is a district court or not it is clearly a court created under the authority of the United States.

This brief suggestion of the chief justice therefore sweeps away a very elaborate cardboard structure, which had been built up on the argument that the court in Alaska was not a district court in that territory. There was no intimation, however, in the statement of the chief justice from which any conclusion can be reached as to the probable decision on the case upon its merits. It is significant, negatively, that the Supreme Court has decided that it has jurisdiction, yet it does not follow that because the court takes jurisdiction it will not decide after hearing arguments upon the merits that the matter being under consideration by the executive branch of the Government, through the ordinary channels of diplomacy, it is not expedient to exercise such power. The court has simply decided that it has technical jurisdiction over the case to review the action of the Court in Alaska in condemning the schooner Sayward to forfeiture.

Bradlaugh's Silent Burial.

London, Feb. 4.—The remains of the late Charles Bradlaugh were yesterday placed to rest in the cemetery at Woking. Special trains from London conveyed 1,500 admirers of the great freethinker to the Surrey town. In accordance with arrangement's previously agreed upon, the ceremonies were of the simplest kind. Many of those who followed the body to the cemetery wore various colored ribbons in their hats. About 2,000 people gathered around the grave. Among those present were John Morley, Henry Labouchere, Mrs. Besant and a number of members of the House of Commons. The coffin was covered with floral wreaths, but no mourning garments were worn, nor was there any display of crape or black cloth. Complete silence was maintained by all who gathered around the grave.

Attempt to Involve the Portuguese—Fifty Persons Killed and Two Hundred Wounded.

Lishon, Feb. 4.—One result of the inquiry made by the military and civil authorities into the cause of the revolt of troops at Oporto on Saturday is the discovery that an effort was made to involve the Portuguese navy in the uprising. Two sergeants of marines belonging to the Sagres, a Government corvette, lying in the roads outside of Oporto, endeavored to incite the crew of that vessel to mutiny and seize the ship. The sergeants were arrested while trying to arrange for the proposed plot. One of the sergeants, named Cardoso, when questioned, declared he was a supporter of the project to establish a federal republic, having its seat of government at Oporto and independent of Lisbon. He added that it was expected the movement in Oporto would have the support of the Spanish revolutionary party. A decree just issued announces that all crimes connected with the rising at Oporto come under the jurisdiction of the military tribunals. This is interpreted to mean that all the civilians as well as the soldiers connected with the ringleaders will probably be shot. It is now stated 50 persons were killed and 200 injured in the fight following the revolt of the garrison at Oporto.

An insurgent leader declares it was the intention of the insurgents to sack Oporto and shoot all officials.

A Pointer.

The Manufacturers' Life Insurance Company and the Manufacturers' Accident Insurance Company, Traders' Bank Building, Toronto, have two separate and distinct charters, stock capital, Government deposits, etc., but are under the same management. Thus the two companies can issue a combination of life and accident insurance never before presenting to the insuring public. To professional men and all others who are likely to incur serious pecuniary inconvenience when laid aside by any casualty, such policies are fitted to prove a great boon. They afford a more complete protection than life policies alone, and do so at a comparatively small additional cost and may be applied to all plans of life insurance.

Hundreds of thousands of life policies have lapsed and been surrendered in consequence of financial difficulties occasioned by personal accident; while in a similar circumstance combined life and accident policies would have proved a source of revenue instead of embarrassment in time of need. This improved system of compensation for injury renders its policies much more valuable than any other policy issued. A Pointer.

Murderer Eyraud Meets His Fate with Paris, Feb. 3.—Michel Eyraud, the mur-

Eyraud met his fate with fortitude or sullen resignation. There were few witnesses of the execution, owing to the fact that it was not generally known that the famous criminal would meet his fate to-day. When the governor of the prison, La Roquet, and the prison chaplain, Abbe Faure, were ushered into Eyraud's cell a short time previous to the hour fixed for the condemned man's execution, they found he was already up and dressed, evidently forewarned, contrary to the rules, by some kind-hearted prison official. Eyraud declined a glass of cognac which was tendered him by one of the wardens, and in spite of the earnest solicitations of Abbe Faure, the murderer positively — even angrilly—refused to listen to the priest's prayers, to pray himself, or to have any religious rites performed in his behalf.

But Eyraud's iron will was not to be shaken even in the presence of death, and he continued impatiently to refuse religious of consolation while on the death march to the guillotine. When pinioned and on the point of being overturned on the bascull of the guillotine, upon the plank which was to glide beneath the fatal suspended knife, Eyraud, with a movementasif of angry contempt or resentment refused to return the last kiss bestowed upon him by Abbe Faure, as is customary in the case of criminals on the point of being executed.

The action of the guillotine, once Eyraud's neck was well beneath the uprights, was instantaneous. There was a flash, and all was over. Eyraud's head had fallen into the sawdust-filled receptacle which awaited it. Then followed the usual mock funeral, and the body of Gouffe's murderer was handed over to Eyraud's friends.

Paris, Feb. 4.—Before Eyraud was strapped to the guillotine he gazed at the faces around him and then angrily exclaimed: "Constans, the Minister of the Interior, was right. He bas won his case, won his prize. He will be to-night with Gabrielle. What grand personage is going to decorate Gabrielle Bompsrad?" When within a few feet of the fatal block Eyraud eluded the executioners for a moment and loudly and angrily shouted to the assembled tion.
