troduced an element of humor by gravely asking all members to remain in their allotted seats to be counted, as "there are so many strangers in this Parliament"—an admission which caused considerable Liberal merriment at the expense of the "strange bedfellows." Both Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Premier were tendered ovations by their following when they rose to record their votes, and all the new members were heartily cheered. The Opposition made the most of the votes of Hon. Messrs. Monk, Pelletier and Nantel, the Nationalist trio in the coalition.

The Real Leader.

Vigorous addresses by Messrs. Loggie and Bolvin, and Hon. Charles Murphy, three Liberals who spoke in succession, concluded the debate. Mr. Murphy subjected the coalition ranks to a severe arraignment. "Their real leader," he declared, "is not a representative in either House. Mr. Borrassa, the actual leader. Mr. Bourassa, the actual leader. Mr. Bourassa, the actual leader. Mr. Bourassa gives his instructions to the titular chief through the Minister of Public Works, his first lleuteannt, and Mr. Armand Lavergne."

The ex-secretary of state created much enthusiasm and amusement by his clever analogy of the coalition Government with Parkman's historic description of the organization of the early Iroquois confederacy. The Indians, it was recorded, were sundered by tribal and individual dissensions, but formed one bond of common purpose in slaughtering the enemy and waxing fat upon the plunder. Mr. Murphy quoted extensively from former speeches of the various men who now form the cabinet, demonstrating their utter inconsistency. He charged in Government with being absolutely at sea as to any naval policy, and of seeking to raise race and creed cries their utter inconsistency. He charged the Government with being absolutely at sea as to any naval policy, and of seeking to raise race and creed cries for the purpose of party advantage. He condemned its inaction in the matter of imperial naval defence. "I like the boa constrictor," he said, "they have done so much swallowing that they have to go into a long sleep to get over the effects."

MONTREAL MURDER CASE.

Montreal, Nov. 29.—The preliminary hearing in the case of John Cummings, charged with the murder of his wife in the Chateauguay street, on Nov. 21, was held before Judge Bazin this morning.

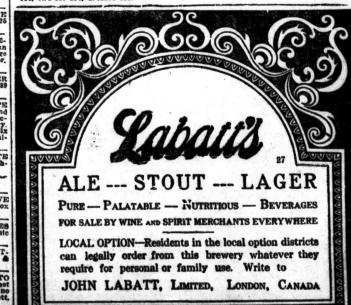

The accused displayed little interest during the hearing, which lasted less than five minutes.

At the conclusion of the hearing an application was made by Mr. Gregor Barclay, counsel for the accused, asking that in view of the financial condition of the accused that he be furnished with a counsel for the court proceedings without cost. The request was granted by Judge Bazin.
