Who Shall We Blame?
To the Editor of The World.

Sik: In the editorial remarks of the Toront Globe of the 19th inst., under the heading "Unravelling the plot," I observe the assertion is made that "every word of the evidence will be read and digested, &c., by all to whom rned for the fair fame of their country as might be a matter of speculation as to how many or what proportion of politicians—including members of parliament-will, accord ing to this definition, or proposition, be found ing to this definition, or proposition, be found private papers are seized and handed over private papers are seized and handed over to the present ing authorities, thus giving as you, Mr. Editor, have since your commencement up to the present time, in treating them an enormous advantage over him. of public matters, or of matters of public in maintained a spirit of independency of all political partyism, your opinion on this point, as well as on the question of how far the plainants in this case may be considered as standing in a fairer or better light tha those against whom they have entered the complaints, might be interesting to your eaders-amongst whom is Owen Sound, March 20, 1884.

The whole crime is a discreditable one. Just what the degree of guilt attaching to the several parties is, we shall not attempt to say, but shall try and place the matter before our readers so that they may apportion the blame themselves.

In the first place we have not the shadow of a doubt that a conspiracy ex. British fair play. isted to overturn the Mowat government, and that Bunting, Meek, and Wilkinson were parties to it. Men still more prominent in the conservative party than these were cognizant of what was going some mere side issue of little account on. There was, further, a fund raised in while all the time the real object might be some mysterious way to buy over govern- to get hold of his private papers, or to find ment supporters. Bunting, Wilkinson, out what was in them. But if a prisoner's and Meek did the feeling; the buying and private papers must be seized, then surely the paying. As to the guilt of these men | no one save the judge or the magistrate there ought not to be any doubt. They before whom he is brought should have to bribe, they went forth to bribe, and they did bribe. They bribed to over- Balfour have all the assistance that the turn a government that was the choice of the people and which could not be over- papers can give them. But suppose counturned by fair means.

As for "the Yankee," Kirkland, he was no essential part of the conspiracy. They took him in with them. Besides they wanted a scapegoat.

Now as to the bribed: it does seem us, after a careful reading of the evidence, and personal notice of the members as they gave it, that they were not as innocent as they or the Globe wish to make out. Some of them at least played with the fire too readily, and seem to have been seized with a sudden desire to expose the con spiracy only when they were corneredthey had to choose between joining hands with the conspirators or going against them. They chose the latter. Honest men do not sup with the devil, go up in his elevator, and make assignations with him, with a good end in view. The man who goes into the devil's workshop "to see just what he's up to" finds himself handling a tool before long.

As for the government: they took pretty much the only course open to them. They found men plotting against them; trying to buy up their supporters; trying to put them from places which they held from the people; and doing this by offering bribes of money and of office. They cannot be blamed for setting a trap, and catching the

As for the reform party: the managers and the organs are altogether too jubilant over what is a crime in their opponents and a cause for shamefacedness to all Candians. But in their elation they walk up in the air. Their countenance is suffused with delight, and they go about trading or their superior purity. Are they purer?

As for the conservative party: they need political institution as some people think. not seek solace in the assertion that there It is probably true that the large majority of the brotherhood are thick and thin was a conspiracy against John Sanfield tories, but that is because their instincts Macdonald, that there was a Speak-now or their reason leads them that way. This does not lessen their responsibility, or render less necessary the sold like beasts in the shambles. But work of purging their party. The Buntmany people appear to have that opinion of the Canadian brethren. In proof of this ings must be got rid of.

As for the great public outside of the party managers, the party organs, and the party leaders, The World speaks for them when it says that they are disgusted at the length to which party warfare has been carried, and that their aim and purpose hereafter shall be to have less of it and o cleaner sample.

The Liberty of the Subject. It was the patriotic work of our forefathers to establish the constitutional principle that the people should not be taxed without their consent; also to pass the habeas corpus act and other acts intended to secure the liberty of the subject. Time was when prisoners were not allowed to have counsel, and when for a man to ap effect on the rank and file. The chists of was almost equivalent to conviction and able influence with the members, either sentence. evil now is-not that the criminal law too severe, but that it is too mild altogether, and that it allows far too many chances for the guilty to escape by mere technicalities. The law itself has become too much like the average poiceman of our time, who is quick to lay who may be found on the streets carrying women and refractory newsboys, while the same school was stabled by the star theater, New York, for the months of August, September and October, to present their Sieba, the latest of French spectacles. burglars, well known roughs and knife and or in a very short time every school will have its corps of banditti, and it will bepistol men go about unmolested. When an individual who has been arested arrives at the police station, the first thing the officers of the law do is to "go through" him. His pocket-book, the full benefit of a tumble in provisions, oney, watch, papers, pocket knife, pipe, the retailer playing the part of the gobbler igar case, or whatever else he may be arrying with are taken from him at once. Now, after proper investigation his money and other articles of property may be returned to him, and his loss simply through having been deprived of them for a time may not be very great. To this, however, there is one important exception. He may have in his pockets papers of great Their lordships are certainly in a position importance to himself and others, which to know more about the subject than the it is his business to keep strictly private. But the law seizes such papers, as well as all others found upon him, and places them at the disposal of those whose busi ness it is to prove him guilty, if they can. A most glaring instance of this kind of injustice has turned up in connection with the present bribery case. Wilkinson's Already one paper of great importance in the case is reported missing. Now, supposing that Wilkinson's counsel had bee able to seize McKim's private papers with out a moment's warning, ere the latter had been able to put them out of the way. Then the two men-the accuser and the accused-would have stood in court on something like equal terms. This is my opinion, founded on the information so far before founded on the information so far before the public, and it appears to me that what is brought against Mr. Kirkland is simply, after all, a thing only very much of the nature of the common lobbying practised with members at every session by outside parties interested in, and desirous of carrying, some particular measure, and that the standing of Mr. Kirkland in the matter is honor itself in comparison with the position in which the government have placed themselves and their friends, Messrs. The king of Italy has offered a gold medal to the Italian wine grower who shall produce the best effervescing wine as a substitute for champagne. Sparkling Asti and other Italian wines of the foaming class bear already a certain resemblance to champagne, and a still greater resemblance to champagne, and a still greater resemblance to sparkling Moselle; for they are sweet, and taken in generous quantities, are apt to give headache. The Italian champagne must be dry; but this indispensible condition offers no difficulty, for Capri is scarcely sweeter than the natural wine of champagne before the syrup is added in the process of turning it into effervescing wine.
