MARINE NOTES. While swinging off from the wharf at Pleasant Point yesterday in tow of the tug Lillie, the schooner Hunter carried away her ribboom and head gear. It came in contact with a shed and the whole went by the board. The vessel was loaded to come through the falls.

The two big American schooners, Edna and Flora M, which put in yesterday for harbor, dragged their anchors during yesterday's heavy blow, and went on the Navy Island bar. As it is a soft mud bottom they came off without any damage.

Fraser Anderson at Little Sheguogue on Tuesday had his leg badly injured, and it will have to be amputated. He was caught in the bar of a mowing machine with which two horses were running away, and was dragged for more than 200 yards.

RAILROAD WATCHMAN HAS REMARKABLE EXPERIENCE

For several years I have been in the employ of the Erie Railroad Company, and in their employ I was taken with kidney trouble. I tried several doctors, but seemed to get no results from their treatment. I tried Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, taking four bottles, which cured me. I am seventy-two years old and am at present at the West Main Street crossing of the Erie Railroad in this village.

Very truly yours, CHRISTOPHER McNALLY, Avon, N. Y. Sworn and subscribed to before me this 13th day of July, 1910. HARRY C. COLLETT, Justice of the Peace.

Letter to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. Prove What Swamp-Root Will Do For You. Send to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. It will convince anyone. You will also receive a booklet of valuable information, telling all about the kidneys and bladder. When writing, be sure and mention the St. John Evening Times-Star. CARE OF THE HAIR IN COLD WEATHER

(From the Southern Christian Chronicle) "Many women take a needless risk in caring for the hair and scalp in cold weather. In spite of the utmost precautions danger of catching colds and colds is always present when the hair and scalp are washed. It is said that too much moisture in the scalp hard and scaly and the hair comes out in great quantities. A dry shampoo not only removes all dirt and excess oil, but is soothing, refreshing and invigorating to the hair roots. Some use plain corn meal for shampooing but it is not so satisfactory as a mixture of 4 ounces of orris root and 4 oz of anything will grow hair, there will and it at least will make any hair light and naturally glossy. Just lift a tablespoonful on the head once a week, or whenever you wish to dress the hair for a special occasion, and brush the orris root and throat completely through the hair."

The lecture was illustrated with songs by Dr. Perrin and Miss Louise Knight. Dr. Arnold Fox acted as accompanist. Miss Helen Lydon of Little River, who was visiting at Westfield, received a severe cut on her arm by falling against a window, which broke. The wound was dressed by Dr. Allingham, of Fairville. The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

THE lady across the aisle from us had on a summer hat and an unusually heavy winter ulster. Said my companion: "Well, if I were going to have one of those ridiculous heavy winter coats, I certainly wouldn't wear my summer hat with it." "Wouldn't she?" I wonder. Suppose, for instance, that her one summer suit got caught in a big shower and positively ruined, and she had to buy her winter coat early, but simply couldn't afford a hat. Now just what would she do in a case like that? Why take it for granted that the lady across the aisle liked the peculiar combination of a winter coat and summer hat? Why not reckon that she was the victim of compelling circumstances, under which we would probably have done the same thing ourselves? How often we all say loftily, "I wouldn't do this or that." How do we know we wouldn't under the same circumstances? We don't!

It seems to me that one of the big lessons of life is to realize what a difference it makes what side of the fence we are on, and not try to say what we would or wouldn't do under circumstances of which we know nothing. It is often amusing to see people suddenly transplanted into the position of others, whom they have previously criticized, and to see how very much the same they act themselves, and what a different point of view they get. Some friends of mine who used to own a horse and drive a good deal, have recently purchased an automobile. When they owned the horse, they could not say anything too strong against their natural enemies, the automobilists. "This speeding is outrageous. There ought to be a jail sentence instead of a fine." "Automobiles ought not to be allowed to go more than ten or fifteen miles an hour. The way some of these chauffeurs try to see what the consequences will come to your carriage wheels is abominable." "It makes me disgusted the way the automobilists keep on tooting when you are already giving them three-quarters of the road." "These fellows are a few of their kind." They have only been in the ranks of the automobilists about six weeks and already the man of the house, who runs the machine has been arrested for speeding. Incidentally, I did not hear any pleading for a jail sentence instead of a fine.

I was out with them the other day, and don't think we went as slowly as ten miles an hour, even in the city streets. Furthermore, they came as close to the carriage which was giving us at least three-quarters of the road, tooting vigorously, as I can remember. I ventured to ask why he tooted a bit timorous lest he should suspect sarcasm, I ventured to ask why he tooted quite as much while wrapping as it would be if it were left unwrapped. He thinks any more room," he explained loftily, "simply to let them know I am coming so they won't swerve out into the road or start to turn round. You know so many of these drivers are absolutely reckless that way. They expect us to take all the care."

I needn't have feared his suspecting sarcasm. One of the finest men I know is a baker. Although he abides by it perfectly, he does not approve of the law requiring that every loaf of bread shall be wrapped in paraffine paper. He says it is a foolish law, because the bread is contaminated quite as much while wrapping as it would be if it were left unwrapped. He thinks the people who agitated that law were either short-sighted or self-interested. Now, this man is a thoroughly sincere, splendidly honest man, and yet I can't help wondering if he were not a baker, if he might not see things differently. What a difference it does make what side of the fence we are on! It is simply impossible that it shouldn't. Use human equitation can't help but enter into the judgments of the best and most just of men. But I do think we can remember not to say, "I wouldn't," of anything. Perhaps we "would" twice as much if we were on that side of the fence.

La MARQUISE de FONTENOY

A Matter of Title—Lord Ashton and His Employers and His Recent Ultimatum

(Copyright, 1911, by the Brentwood Company)

Macrocorate is a name which figures so conspicuously in the history of the southern part of Europe, that one is tempted to inquire why A. D. Macrocorate, who is staying at the Hotel Gotham, in New York, should have considered it worth while to assume the title of prince, to which he has no right whatsoever, for all the nobility titles have been rigorously abolished, not only by law, but also by the constitution of Greece, of Rumania, of Servia and of Bulgaria, and their use is forbidden. Indeed, the emperor of Rumania, George Cantacuzene, chief of a house that formerly exercised sovereign sway over the Byzantine Empire at Constantinople, and who was styled emperor of the East, "Mr." Cantacuzene, and attracted no little attention by declining to address the emperor as prince in the official letter which he issued to him appointing him as principal representative of the Rumanian government at the last international exhibition in Paris.

The Macrocorates received a title of ordinary nobility that is to say, the mere right of prefixing the particle "von" to their name, from the Emperor of Germany, who bestowed it upon Alexander Macrocorate who was the physician and dragoman of the Sultan at the beginning of the eighteenth century, on the occasion of his successful negotiations to restore peace between the Ottoman Empire and Germany, and which culminated in the treaty of Carlowitz in 1699.

His son Nicholas, who also filled the position of interpreter to the Sultan, was appointed by the Sublime Porte to be the hospodar, or Christian governor, of the Ottoman province of Moldavia, and after the death of Wallachia.

The title of hospodar, which is equivalent to the Russian governor, the French "seigneur," or to the English word "lord," was merely accorded by the Sultan to the Christian provinces, because he did not consider them, as Christians, worthy of bearing the Turkish title of pasha, or bey, which in those days were restricted exclusively to Moslems.

The title of hospodar was purely one of office, and lapsed when the governor resigned his post as such, or was dismissed therefrom. It was never hereditary, and the idea of the descendants of those former hospodars, who were not even considered worthy of being mere beys, styling themselves prince, is ridiculous. Nor is their title of prince based on this shadowy foundation, recognized by any of the monarchial courts of Europe.

Perhaps the best proof of what I assert is the fact that none of the Macrocorates who have served Greece as envoys in Constantinople, St. Petersburg, Paris, London, Berlin or Vienna, have ever been received at any of the courts of "princes," but always as plain "Mr. Macrocorate."

Probably the most famous of all the

Macrocorate was that Alexander Macrocorate, who, born in 1787, was one of the leaders of the Greek war of independence, and who served several terms as prime minister at Athens, notably in 1841.

Some of them have been less fortunate. Thus, I recall one who blew out his brains some time ago in Paris on being brought face to face with the consequences of an unpleasant scrape. Another one, who represented Greece for a time at Stamboul, became involved in all sorts of legal trouble along with his wife, in connection with charges, brought before the Greek tribunals, of having kidnapped the fifteen-year-old daughter of an enormously wealthy Greek banker, Georgios, in Constantinople, and guardian in default, having married her at the legation to one of his secretaries named Verinaki, a relative of the ambassador, Mino Macrocorate.

Then there was the late George Macrocorate, at one time minister of war in Rome, who had married one of the daughters of the multi-millionaire railroad contractor Sina, who used to make his home in Vienna, and who built so many of the railways in the dominions of Emperor Francis Joseph. One of the daughters of old Sina, who was a self-made man in every sense of the word, became the wife of the Austrian Count d'Empfer, but divorced him when she found that he was making use of his position as postmaster in a manner not conforming to the government or by his matrimonial obligations. It will be sufficient to say that the determining cause of the divorce were furnished by telegraph girls and post-mistresses when the count considered it part and parcel of his duty to recruit.

Another daughter of old Sina married one of the Ypsilantis, former Greek ministers in New York. The Ypsilanti, who married Sina's daughter, ran through all his own money and his wife's, was forced to undertake a diplomatic mission on account of the financial scandals in Vienna, which he became involved in, and ultimately committed suicide. His wife was gassed as a bankrupt a few years after his death.

The third daughter married the French Duc de Castries, brother of the late Marquis de Castries, Duchesse de Magenta. On the death of the first husband, the Duchesse de Castries, became the wife of Vicomte Emmanuel d'Harcourt, who was secretary to Marshal MacMahon when the latter was president of the French republic. The former Duchesse de Castries and her husband were among the most conspicuous figures on the French turf to-day, and the duchess still owns one of the most successful racing stables in France. The fourth daughter married the late George Macrocorate, the father of the "Prince" Macrocorate, now in New York.

Lord Ashton and His Men

Lord Ashton, popularly known as the linoleum king, owing to his virtual monopolizing of that industry in the United Kingdom, and who is at the head of the greatest oil-cloth concern in the world, has spent so much of his enormous wealth in philanthropy, and has been so uniformly generous to his many thousands of employees in Lancashire, that his announcement of his determination to close his great works, rather than to consent to an advance of wages, constitutes a rather notable event. It is the first time in fifty years of trouble between this great employer of labor, and his working people. He, moreover, announces that, if conditions of trade become more than they are at present, through railroad and coalmining

CURIOSITY Prompted Many Women To Try PURITY FLOUR

THEY were curious to see exactly what results would be produced by flour consisting entirely of the high-grade portions of the best Western hard wheat.

They were curious to know more about a flour that contained none of the low-grade portions, which are found in every wheat berry, but which are separated and excluded from the high-grade in the process of milling PURITY FLOUR.

They were curious to know whether an ALL HIGH-GRADE hard wheat flour was really superior to a mixed hard and soft wheat flour.

They were curious to see and taste the kind of bread, buns, biscuits, cakes and pies PURITY FLOUR would make.

Curiosity prompts you to seek the knowledge they discovered. It's urging you to try PURITY FLOUR.

REMINDER: On account of the extra strength and extra quality of PURITY FLOUR it is necessary, for best pastry-results, to add more shortening than you are accustomed to use with an ordinary flour. Add more water when making bread.
