THE SURE CURE.

Some grand old truths are everlasting; one is that industry is good; amid the yawping and dodgasting, remember that, and saw your wood. Too many talkers spring their wheezes, too many make the welkin ring; and as a cure for our diseases work is the sane and proper thing. Too many orators are climbing on stumps and kegs to show their curves; and even as I do this rhyming a braying windsmith jars my nerves. The and even as I do this rhyming a braying windsmith jars my nerves. The puzzling knots we will unravel, and get things going right once more, when we give up pawing up the gravel and get down to the useful chore. There's nothing like some honest sweating to drive the fantods from our brains, and help us to the prompt forgetting of all our penalties and pains. When I am idle I start brooding, and entertain the saddest views, and I have nightmares, vain, deluding, and I see snakes and kangaroos. But I am cheerful when I'm busy, I sing sweet songs in dulcet tones; the Russian stuff seems punk and dizzy to one who's earning honest bones. And when we all get down to toiling said Russian stuff will see a slump; and fervid language will be spoiling, with other rubbish, at the dump.

A Thanksgiving Day observed in this spirit is worth while for the individual and for the nation.
