A MYSTERY AT THE CITY HALL

TWO WATER REPORTS REPORTED MISSING

Their Disappearance Causes Considerable Uneasiness-Into Whose Hands Haye They Fallen?

(From Saturday's Second Edition.) Agitation reigns in the municipal holy, of holies; an atmosphere of uneasiness pervades the sphere of civic officialdom. Suspician is rife in high places, and it Suspician is rife in high places, and it has all to do with the highly interesting part of Expert Adams on the all-imreport of Expert Adams on the all-important question of Victoria's water supply. When the Times published, for the ification of the public, those portions of the report the censor had artistically and unfeelingly obliterated, last Saturday afternoon the council, or to be more accurate, a certain section, of whose identity the public are aware, were distinctly annoyed. Of course they took the stand that the Times was acting against the best interests of the city in providing the Esquimalt Waterworks Company with ammunition for a possible conflict. And this view they took without the faintest compunctions throb of conscience for the inferential reflection upon the astute ness of the company's officials.

But it is not the peculiar annoyance of members of the council with which this article has to do. It is by far a circum-stance more important, and unusually sensational. When the report of Expert Adams was received from San Francisco twenty-five copies were ordered to be This was done, and they distributed as follows: Ten to the Mayor and aldermen, two (ravaged by the cruel scissors) to the press, and the remaining thirteen to the strong box in the city hall, wherever that may be. But the discovery has been made that there are not thirteen left; that two are missing, and this is the cause of the agitation. and this is the cause of the agitation.

Where are those two copies? Who has them, and why? The Times published the expunged portions of the report; can they be in its possession? No, the Times the expunged portions of the report; can they be in its possession? No, the Times hath them not, and can prove the fact to the committee of investigation that the council should appoint. How about the waterwarks company? A Times representative rang them up this morning for the laudatory purpose of locating the missing copies in the interests of the community, and procuring their return. "Certainly not; we haven't got them," came the prompt reply. "Sure?" queried the reporter. "Of course we are sure," was the answer; "we will give you an affidavit to that effect if you want it." To-morrow he and Mr. Marpole will go over the line of the E. & N., giving Mr. McNicoll an opportunity to make a full inspection of it.

How would Sherlock go to work on the case, one wonders. He would no doubt follow his usual course and erect a little mental enclosure around those interested in the matter. He would dismiss the public en masse. The newspapers would be investigated more deeply and he would find in the possession of the Times a copy of the whole report, but not one of those that are missing. The Times would then be turned out of the pad-

Then would come the waterworks company. They might show him a score of copies of the report, but among them he would not find the particular twain that should repose in the civic strong box. Who next? Ah, the British Columbia Electric Railway Company. They, of course, have a slight interest in the matter, but Sherlock Holmes would hardly consider them as likely subjects for investigation. And yet, Holmes might make an erratic departure from his well-known methods and turn an X-ray upon the entire system. After having failed to locate the copies here he would try elsewhere.
