Louisville, the other day. Speaking to the National Association of life men, he declared that insurance agents can best serve themselves and the business by making the interests of policyholders their chief concern. Any man who advantages himself at the undue expense of the policyholder, he said, will "assuredly postpone the day when we are to receive the full confidence and support of the public and reap the proper reward of a true understanding by the public of the benefits of insurance—a large increase in the volume written."
