

Editor Threatens To Resign After Students' Council Hassle

SASKATOON (CUP)—Dan Bereskin, editor of the University of Saskatchewan student newspaper, said he might resign in the wake of his four-hour grilling by the University student council Monday Nov. 28.

"I'm fed up with the pressure building up around us," the editor of The Sheaf told The Manitoban in a phone call from Saskatoon.

"Everyone's down our neck and I've had about as much as I can take."

The storm of trouble arose when council questioned the following:

The Sheaf's publication of the notorious "Dora" story, which resulted in the expulsion of three student editors at Laval University in Quebec.

Bereskin's alleged poor display while attending the recent Western Canadian University Press Conference in Vancouver.

Kickbacks to the editorial staff of The Sheaf from photographers and the circulation manager, who are paid for their work.

Lack of publicity to some University events.

Bereskin said two students gained entry to his office Sunday night by asking a member of the photography staff to open the door for them and witness their findings.

The two were Murray Swanston, president of the Students Representative Council and Bruce McCulloch, council secretary, Bereskin said.

The editor said The Sheaf has taken council to task this year for alleged incompetence.

Swanston asked council to vote on Bereskin's dismissal at the Monday night meeting. Members voted 12-4 in favor of retaining the editor. Both Swanston and McCulloch voted to oust him.

"Dan feels that this is a personal vendetta, but this is certainly not the case," Swanston said. "We felt we were acting in the students' best interests to dismiss him."

"I had nothing to gain from his dismissal," the president said.

In a statement prior to the meeting, Bereskin said:

"Swanston and McCulloch have been lobbying among the members of the SRC for support in their plans to overthrow The Sheaf editorial staff and fill the positions so vacated with students of their own choosing.

"Members of the SRC for the most part have been non-committal in stating what stand they were going to take, but three of the more vocal and powerful members of the council have come out in support of The Sheaf.

"Bob Burchill, Law president, Roy Romanow, president of the Memorial Union Building Board of Directors, and Len Pollock, Public Relations Officer for the SRC, have taken a firm stand on behalf of the paper.

"Among the charges which Swanston and McCulloch are expected to bring up is one involving the misappropriation of stationary supplies belonging to The Sheaf, the value of which does not exceed three dollars."

Campus Hosts Prexie's Meet

The presidents of Canada's four Western Universities met at the University of Alberta, Saturday and Sunday. It was the first such meeting in five years.

They discussed common problems and future plans, and ways in which they could cooperate more closely in matters of mutual interest.

The visitors were: Dr. N. A. M. MacKenzie, president of the University of British Columbia; Dr. J. W. T. Spinks, University of Saskatchewan president; and Dr. H. H. Saunders, president of the University of Manitoba. They met with Dr. W. H. Johns and other U of A officials.

Dr. MacKenzie was represented at some of the sessions by Dr. E. D. MacPhee, assistant to the president. A. C. McEown, presidential assistant at U of S, was also in attendance.

Faculties and schools that are not found on all campuses, like Alberta's petroleum engineering and UBC's and U of M's architecture, were considered, as were mutually cooperative ventures as the Banff School of Advanced Management, operated jointly by the four Universities since 1953.

The meetings were quite informal, Dr. Johns stated. "We don't get together often enough for these talks."

REFLECTIONS

Chivalry is dead.

The theory that women are the weaker sex and should be treated as such has given way to the theory that women are superior; which is nonsense. Moreover, women use the claim of superiority to demand servility of men; which is unchivalrous. It's precisely because medieval Man thought medieval Woman inferior to himself that he served her. After all, she couldn't be expected to do all those things for herself, could she? Might injure herself, y'know.

Chivalry is dead.

The theory that men have equal claim to individuality, and therefore should be treated as equals, has given way to the theory that men are equal; which is a lie. Moreover, men use the theoretical equality of men as an excuse for damning any man who insists he's different; which is unchivalrous. It's precisely because medieval Man thought each had an equal claim to be himself that he did not object to difference. Might imply the other chap wasn't as good as yourself, y'know.

Chivalry is dead.

The theory that the weak are unable to protect themselves, and therefore should be protected by the strong, has given way to the theory of survival of the fittest; which is morally false. Moreover, survival of the fittest is used as an excuse for the strong to use the weak to their aims; which is not only unchivalrous but evil. It's precisely because medieval Man thought that the weak were unable to spare the effort from the task of remaining alive, that he thought the strong should use their strength for the public good. Otherwise you might imply the other chap had less right to stay alive than yourself, y'know.

Chivalry is dead. Let this be its obsequies.
