STRATHROY.

The town of Strathroy is situated on the river Sydenham, on the borders of the townships of Adelaide and Caradoc. It is the principal station of the Sarnia Branch of the Great Western Railway. The greater part of the town site was, previous to 1832, a pine forest, and was originally a free grant from the Crown to James Buchanan, the Consul at New York, who gave it to his son, John Stewart Buchanan, in that year, the property consisted of 181 acres.

The township of Adelaide was settled the same year, when one hundred and fifty emigrants, with a commissary, arrived at Katesville, a point three miles west of Strathroy, on the Sydenham river, or Bear Creek, and spread over the adjoining territory, and in 1847 the village of Strathroy commenced its progress. At that time it consisted of three frame dwelling houses, a grist and saw mill, a blacksmith's shop, and a few log dwellings; no store nor post office, and no road worthy of that name.

In 1858 the Sarnia Branch of the Great Western was commenced, and since that time the progress of the town has been rapidly increasing. The country adjoining is very fertile and the inhabitants are possessed of that vigorous go-a-headitiveness which commands success. The Strathroy Knitting Co. have an extensive factory here, employing over 100 hands. Distant from London 20 miles from Sarnia 40, and from Ailsa Craig 14. Population about 4,500
