AVIATORS LEARN OBSERVATION BY REMARKABLE MAP
Built Up of Sand—Electric Flashlights Indicate Shell Bursts
TEACHES GUNFIRE
Finest Map of its Kind in World - At Toronto School of Aeronautics

Perhaps not the most romantic and yet still the most important part of the flying man's duties at the front is the control of gunfire from above the lines of the enemy. Anyone visiting the School of Military Aeronautics at the Toronto University can measure the importance attaching to this branch of the Flying Corps' work by the elaborate and interesting course laid out for training cadets in aerial observation since it is impossible to take a whole class of cadets four or more thousand feet into the air, the instruction has to be given in specially arranged class rooms. In one of these class rooms a ground map covers the floor—the most remarkable map of its kind in the world. It is made of sand colored to correspond with the actual colors of the ground and dotted with miniature buildings, trees, rivers, roads—all accurately located and representative of the actual appearance of the ground from an altitude of 4,000 feet.

The aviators-in-training look down on this map from a gallery. The instructor flashes tiny electric lights which are embedded in the sand to indicate bursting shells. Cadets, watching these bursts and the small maps with which they are supplied, send down to the instructor, wireless codes advising him how to correct his fire. It can be seen that this necessarily calls for a quick and alert brain, a eagle eye and a thorough grounding in wireless telegraphy. Yet this splendid training is but one of the many phases of the aviator's preparation. Apart from actual flying he must also know something of the tactics of bombing, engine and airplane construction, machine-guns, aerial photography, map-reading, meteorology. It can be said that the courses followed by cadets at the School of Military Aeronautics ensure that no aviator is given his wings at the front without having as his best equipment a thorough practical training in all these branches of the flying man's craft.

HONESTY DESIRABLE
By Courier Leased Wire.
Amsterdam, Jan. 12.—Addressing the British Society of Berlin, Professor Hans Delbrueck, of the University of Berlin who has on several occasions made important statements regarding future peace, said that Germany might completely renounce territorial acquisitions both in the East and West. Honesty he added, was desirable, not on Pacific grounds, but on those of higher political sagacity. The practical proof of the correctness of this conception, he contended was to be found in the success of the British policy with respect to South Africa.

Good Night Stories
THE TWO BROOKLETS
One day two little brooklets met at the foot of a hill.

"Isn't it strange we should meet. I've watched how slowly you've been travelling down the hillside and never thought you'd catch up with me. I'm on my way to the sea to offer him my services," babbled the first little brooklet.

"What chance have you, a tiny stream, to help the mighty sea? Best tarry awhile, it's foolish to be so terribly restless," cried the second.

"I'd rather be restless than slow. What good can a slow fellow like you do in the world I'd like to know!" exclaimed the first brooklet.

So they quarrelled and would have parted company right then if Mrs. Lake hadn't overheard them and called them into her beautiful home.

"How foolish to fuss this way! It takes both kinds of brooklets to make this old world. Just because one is restless he mustn't think the other of no use because he seems slow," laughed Mrs. Lake. "Now, both of you start down that hill and when you find a place where you're needed, stop and help. Then you will see what I tell you is true," and Mrs. Lake made the two part in peace.

"You may go on to the sea, but I still contend that a restless fellow can do very little to help the world," cried the second brooklet, and he settled at the foot of the mountain and made himself a beautiful lake.

The first little brooklet danced away through the valley, only stopping long enough to turn the old millwheel in the village, then he hurried on to reach the sea.

The long summer days were happy ones to the second little brooklet, but when the winter set in he had to close himself up in a house of ice and he was very unhappy.

"My brother is right. It is better to be restless than to be so slow. What good am I? He's probably dancing away his days on the broad old Mr. Sea, while I'm good for nothing, content to remain in the valley," he sighed.

But that very day the village folk came with horses and wagons and cut and carried off the little brooklet's ice roof. At first he was indignant, but he overheard one of the men say that the village couldn't do without him. Then his watery heart swelled with pride and as fast as they carried away his roof he built himself another, and so the water days passed and spring once more returned to the valley, and with her came the Bluebird with news of the first little brooklet.

"The sea told me he needed every brooklet he could get, no matter how small, to help him float the mighty ships that sail his foam," sang Bluebird, stopping for a drink.

"Mrs. Lake was right, after all. And I thought my brother too small to be of any help, and too restless to be of any service to any one!" the brooklet laughed.

"It takes both kinds to make the world, and no matter how tiny you are there's a place where you're needed. The sea needed your restless brother, and the village folks need you, whom your brother called slow," replied Bluebird.

Then he spread his wings and flew back to Mrs. Lake to tell her of the two little brooklets she had started out.

HAMILTON CRIPPLED
By Courier Leased Wire
Hamilton, Ont., Jan. 12.—A blizzard which held Hamilton in its grip throughout the night was still blowing big guns at noon to-day. The power failed shortly before 8 o'clock, crippling the big munition plants and other factories for over two hours, while street railway and suburban traffic was tied up for the same length of time. Business generally was disrupted and considerable damage done, many windows in the business section being blown in while the big sign over Loew's Theatre crashed through the marquee early in the morning. At ten thirty traffic on the electric lines was resumed.
