They strike somewhere every day.
They strike readily.
And they make no splutter or fuss about it.
When they have struck they show a clear and steady flame.
They are reliable before—and steady after their strike.
They are safe!
They won't explode when trodden on.
Their heads are firm and do not fly off.
They perform well their mission in life.
There is a merry life, too, in a short one.
When they are put out, they stay out.
They are guaranteed not to burn again in after life.
They are Eddy's Matches.

Britain Saves Daylight

(Boston Herald)

The British appear to have finished their discussion of the question of daylight saving during the summer months and arrived at a definite conclusion. At least, the Government has decided what Parliament shall be asked to do. Home Secretary Short has given notice in the House of Commons of the Government's intention to introduce legislation for the purpose of making permanent for what is usually called the Summer Time Act, under which the clocks are set forward one hour. In previous years the arrangement was made only by order-in-council as an emergency measure considered desirable under war conditions. But under those conditions the order had legislative force, and so, in the United Kingdom, "summer time" is not merely a popular, but a legislative phrase for the advancement of the time shown by clocks, legal or clock time, by one hour during a certain portion of the year. In 1917, this summer time was in operation from April 8 to Sept. 17, in 1918, from March 24 to Sept. 29, and in 1918, from March 24 to Sept. 29, and in 1919, from March 24 to Sept. 29. Three seasons' experience has convinced a vast majority of the people that the daylight saving system is generally beneficial. City dwellers and workers are, apparently, unanimous in the desire for its perpetuation because of the benefits they have derived from it. For one thing, it gave them a healthful hour out in the open sunset were so useful as the cost of living increased that there is a strong feeling against allowing the cultivated back yards and small allotments to become waste places. Labor is all for the continuance of the healthy and thrifty habits and the profitable results due to those little gardens. The agricultural opposition is not nearly so strong in Britain as it is in America—and it could not be, because British agriculture produces so small a portion of the nation's food. In Massachusetts and New York, where state laws for daylight saving are under discussion, there is a sharp division between the com-

Roadside Flowers

(Bliss Carman, who belongs to that wonderfully gifted family that has given Canada the Roberts men and women, is ill with tuberculosis at Saranac Lake. Mr. Carman is a singer who should have been a troubadour with no necessity for giving thought to the ways and means of life. He was never a practical man and his illness has found him without the rainy day funds advocated by wise men. It is not good business, but he has added to the sum of Canadian literature and perhaps, after all, a little poem, Roadside Flowers, in which his creed is expressed, may emphasize to the practical the value of men like Carman.)

We are the Wayside Flowers,
Straying from garden grounds,
Lovers of idle hours,
Breakers of ordered bounds.

If only the earth will feed us,
If only the wind be kind,
We blossom for those who need us.
The stragglers left behind.

And lo, the Lord of the garden,
He makes His sun to rise,
And His rain to fall like pardon,
On our dusty paradise.

On us He laid the duty,
The task of the wandering breed,
To better the world with beauty,
Wherever the way may lead.

Who shall enquire of the season,
Or question the wind where it blows?
We blossom and ask no reason.
The Lord of the Garden knows.

mercantile, manufacturing and labor representatives on one side and the farmers' representatives on the other. The question will have to be settled according to the principle of the greatest good of the greatest number. It will be prudent to remember that we have to compete with British trade, and that British producers know what they are about in the saving of daylight.

A Security that is Well Protected

There is no speculation in an investment in the securities of the Maritime Telegraph & Telephone Company. The value of the Company's property has been fixed by the Public Utilities Commission, and the return allowed is more than sufficient to pay all interest charges. Adequate reserves have been made and retained to cover depreciation, and damage from storms, etc., so that the capital of the Company is well protected. The reserves today are over one million dollars.

The telephone will always be required as an aid to the transaction of business and for social convenience. The growth of its use in Nova Scotia is indicated by the following:

1912	15,061 telephones
1919	26,406 telephones

The Public Utilities Commission by adjustment of rates whenever such becomes necessary, gives assurance that a return of 5% on the capital invested in the Maritime Telegraph & Telephone Company is practically guaranteed.
