THE CITY OF NEW HAVEN.

IT WILL SHORTLY CELEBRATE ITS 250TH ANNIVERSARY.

Some Historical Matters That Are Recalled Thereby-How and by Whom the Town Was Founded-Pictures of His-

The city of New Haven, Conn., is about to celebrate the 250th anniversary of its birth the 25th of April being the day set for the event.

The minicipality of this town traces its descent from the parish of St. Stephen, Coleman street. London. On the 16th of October 1624, a party of these sturdy Englishmen together with their parson, Rev John Davenport, decided to leave the oppression of their mother country and sail to America, where religion and thought would be free. For harboring such opin-ions they were persecuted and their lives endangered For several years they were driven about, first to the continent and finally to America, where they landed at Boston. Every inducement was made by the people of the infant Hub for the new colonists to remain there. But as they were determined to found a new state, with English puritanism as the basis of their government, a portion of the party pushed on along the coast, seeking a new location. In this number, besides the two

In the fall of 1637 these men, after a long journey, nearly overcome by hunger and like hardships, reached the beautiful harbor, located and called the place In-Innipiac, afterward New Haven. The location was a most beautiful and promising one, with a large bay protected by an amphitheatre of rocky hills. Cold weather soon came upon the little band, with no provisions or place of abode. With willing hands they labored night and day, and soon had cellars in the river bank for dwelling places. These rude shelters were protected by boards, sticks and turfs, resembling the western "dugout." A town plot was laid out, a half mile square, bounded by what are now George, York, Grove and State streets, and divided into nine minor squares, with a central section reserved for a market, the spot which now is occupied by the famous "Green."

On the 25th of April, 1638, the remainder of the settlers arrived from Boston. They reached their new home on Saturday, and the first thing Sunday morning they, were called together by the good parson and preached to, under a large tree, from the text, Matt. iv, 1. A. section of this mammoth oak tree formed the support of the anvil on which two stalwart generations of Beechers hammered before byman Beecher transferred the role of the family from the anvil to the pulpit. The old white house in which Lyman Beecher was born is now standing. Tradition tells of the kindliness of the earlier Becchers. They were simple, lov-able, always ready to help those in need, and, as a consequence, lived in comparative poverty, traits which the descendants of the old stock still exhibit. Henry Ward Beecher and his wife used to make frequent visits to this historic spot. Early in the year the settlers began to erect houses, and in the latter part of 1638 the houses, and in the latter part of 1638 the colonists had permanent dwellings.

These old houses were queer buildings, with their rough hewn boards and shingles. Indians should interrupt the services. The city militia were given seats near eachdoor to be in readiness. So at an early hour Sunday morning, at the call of the town drummer, the citizens, well armed, ventured to church. As no atoves were allowed in the church, even as late as 1820, the men carried foot stoves for the women. During the short intermission the worshipers would run home, get warm, eat a lunch and return to shiver and hear the rest of the sermon.

The present Green was used as a cemetery from 1638 to 1796. It was surrounded with a high board fence, painted red. Here and in the crypt of Center church lie the remains of many distinguished men in church and state, litera ture and politics, ornaments to the little struggling colony in former days and now honored by their descendants. Their funerals were simple affairs and yet peculiar. The bodies were borne on the shoulders of the bearers, who were always furnished with wine before and after the services to strengthen their nerves, it is

During the revolutionary period the city played an important part. She sent many ave men from her rocky hills to the front to battle for this new republic. Among the names of her famous men are Admiral Foote and many more, besides that man, detestable to every loyal American citizen, Benedict Arnold. This last his country's traitor, never stood high in the esteem of his fellow townsmen. In personal appearance he was tall, erect, with a treacherous look, and even before his treasonable actions was disliked by his neighbors. On the 5th of July, 1779, two ships of the British squadron landed at the harbor and sent two divisions of infantry to sack the town. After several small skirmishes on the evening of that day the redcoats had possession of the city. Word was sent out to reighboring towns, and all night the rustic militia poured into town and next morning compelled the half drunken Englishmen to beat a hasty retreat to their vessels. Several battles were fought near New Haven, but none
