Empire Pageant

THE PAGEANT OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

SCENE I.

The Departure of John Cabot, 1498.

So we come to the ancient city of Bristol, and this man whose going attracted but small attention at the time, as other men of that city had done for many years when they gathered in the seas of the North West their "stock fish," the regular Lenten food of England.

And the Abbott who blessed him as he went, and the Mayor and citizens who waved to him "Farewell, Cabot," had no more thought than the King, whose commission he bore, that the world's destiny lay with the little band or that this unknown man was the first pioneer of the greatest Empire that this world has seen.

SCENE II.

Formal Annexation Of The Island In The Name Of Queen Elizabeth, 1583.

Settlement, however, did not follow the discovery of Newfoundland by John Cabot for many a year. But after the pioneers came the fishermen, who found fish there in greater quantities than had ever before been known. So within twenty years it became the resort of men of all countries, till there was danger lest it should be forgotten that Newfoundland was English soil ever since the day that the Bristol adventurer landed there.

And now, in 1583, Sir Humphrey Gilbert, landing with his lieutenants and his crew, is received by merchants of all nations, some in silk, some in rich habits, others with cutlasses and pistols at their belts.

Then, with the ancient ceremony of "digging of the turf," Sir Humphrey Gilbert takes formal possession of the land "in the name of Elizabeth, by the grace of God, Queen of England, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith," and a salute is heard from the guns of the distant ship.

SCENE III.

End of the Rule of the Fishing Admirals, 1611-1729.

But the unruly horde of fishermen was a body hard to manage, and so from immemorial customs the Captain of the first vessel of the year to arrive at the Banks was made Admiral for the whole year, with power over crews and the shipless fishers from the shore.

Their misrule came to an end, however, when the senior Naval Officer of the Newfoundland station was made Governor of the Island, and the long era of settled government of the country had begun, and Newfoundland became a colony, and no longer was only a shore on which fishermen of old rested intermittently from their labours.

SCENE IV.

The Proclamation at Government House, 1865.

It is the year 1860 and for five years past full self-government has been introduced in this land which Cabot had discovered.

We are in a garden at the Government House of St. John's, the capital city, and a crowd assembles at the Governor's bidding to meet Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, in the flower of his early youth.

He enters with the Governor accompanied by his staff, heralded with a salute of guns and pealing of bells, and the proclamation by the Governor is read.

Then the band strikes up, and in their quaint hooped skirts the ladies are led out to dance in the great Quadrille, and curtsy to their swains whose cravats and peg-top trousers remind us of the photographs in our old albums of long-forgotten grandfathers.

SCENE V.

The Triumph Of Newfoundland.

In a triple scene we are brought out of the past into the untold miracles of the present and the undreamed of wonders of the future.

The First Cable* across the Atlantic was laid from Newfoundland in 1858, and the Old World was put at once into instantaneous communication with the New. Here the end is carried ashore and hauled to the cable house, where the first message is received on Lord Kelvin's mirror galvanometer.

The First Transatlantic Flight was one of the heros of the New Age. Sir John Alcock and Sir Arthur Whitten Brown flew from Newfoundland to Clifden, Ireland, in 1913.

The First Wireless* long distance signals were sent by Cavaliere Marconi from Poldhu, Cornwall, to St. John's, Newfoundland, in 1901. What a vision of the future it unfolds to us who have been gazing on the Past, as Marconi himself in the flesh passes down the great arena, with the very men who helped him in these experiments, carrying in their hands, like some Holy Grail, the actual instruments with which this first great result was obtained. Our blood must thrill and our very hearts stand still at a moment at the thought of those great and undreamed forces which the world has still to discover.

*The Western Union Cable Co. have kindly arranged the scene of the Laying of the First Cable.

*The Marconi Co. have kindly arranged the scene of the First Wireless Experiments.

Bishop's Speech Startles Lords.

DR. HENSON'S CONDEMNATION OF TEETOTAL FANATICS.

A striking speech by the Bishop of Durham, in which he vigorously denounced the bigotry and unwisdom of teetotal fanatics, created a sensation in the House of Lords recently.

The principle of Prohibition could not be limited in its application. That was one of the lessons America taught.

They might begin with a small local veto area, but they would have to go on increasing the area until they had what the Americans called a "nation-wide" effort.

The choice of food and drink was an essential franchise of self-respecting manhood. The policy of the Bill was unwise. It placed rich and poor on a footing of inequality.

When Mr. Henry Ford attained his ideal of "one car one citizen," it would be a blow at intemperance, because people were not likely to drink when they had to drive on our perilous roads. (Laughter and cheers.)

"Let us preserve the lessons of the war," urged the Bishop. "Let us perpetuate and extend the shortening of hours. Let us make sure of earlier closing. Above all, let us throw ourselves into the salutary movement for providing improved public houses."

Instead of making the trade respectable, let them try to make it responsible and respectable.

I would have the whole hierarchy of the trade—from the brewery director, who may have a seat in your Lordships' House—to the little pot-boy, know that they are engaged in a lawful and salutary industry, ministering to the legitimate needs of the people; an industry shadowed by great risks, and, therefore, calling for a special standard of responsibility in those who have its management.

The only thing that could defeat the victory of temperance was the bigotry and unwisdom of teetotal fanatics.
