w He Manages the Bureau of Stati ties and Keeps the Splendid Re-sources of Ontario Before the World.

One of the noisiest corners in Toronto is that of Queen and Yonge. What with the crowd of people passing on, the crowds who want to stand still, the policemen who want them to move on, the clamor of the newsboys and the shouting, that corner is a throng of sound, if not of fury. But there is quietness not far off. High above towers the Agricultural Hall. You go in at a side door, climb one flight of stairs and turn along a hall, where, in the row of rooms on each side all appears peace, repose, with people seeding writing or repolicy best of the newsborners and the state of the late Licutenant-Governor McLelan is worth $150,000.

The harsh treatment by Dominion Government officials of settlers in the Dauphin district, Man., has created much complaint.

Various functionaries inhabit here. It is a busy bes-hive with many cells, but in one spacious apartment towards the center we find, seated at a table content of the conte find, seated at a table covered with books, pamphlets, reports, calculations, mempamphlets, reports, calculations, memoranda and most other things in the literary line, a square-built gentleman, who rises and greets us civily as we enter, a thing, by the way, certain officials I have known were not sufficiently educated to do. This is Mr. A. Blue, the Deputy Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, and also manager of the Bureau of Statistics. If you want to know what crops each portion of Ontario grows, how many horses, cows and wheel carriages navigate each field, what moneys lucky in dividuals have in hand, what wages other parties obtain, what influence the planets above have had on the crops, or what amount of minerals lie dormant below the surface, why—there you are.

Mr. Blue is a gentleman of education and intelligence—his intellect is many-sided. He has been in his day a powerful writer for the press, and manifests the the general knowledge and readiness of that class; while, in addition, his statistical pursuits for the last decade probably make him, in Ontario matters, one of our best informed men. What strikes you in conversation with him is the solidarity of his method of speaking. Apparently, he gives no opinion until he has, by a rapid process, massed all the facts he has access to in his mind. LONDON, Aug. S.—At a banquet at the Mansion House Lord Salisbury in a speech enlarged upon the pacific aspect of Europe during the years of his government. The power of Europe, le said, never presented so uninteresting an aspect from the war point of view. The tendency to the settlement of disputes on terms of compromise was spreading fast and influencing every power. Referring to Egypt, the Premier said that nothing in the course of his administration had been more satisfactory than that country's steady progress toward financial equilibrium. The future of the country was a diplomatic matter of some delicacy. The time had not come for Egypt to govern itself. Regarding home affairs, Lord Salisbury claimed that the present government of Ireland had been successful, and that the country was more orderly, more contented and more prosperous than ever before. He trusted that he would never again see those in power who were pledged to support a reign of anarchy.

Turkish Temerity.

London, Aug. S.—In the House of Commons, replying to Mr. Sewarin's criticisms on Turkey's dealing with Armenia, Sir James Fergusson said he regrotted that member's unfortunate language, which was almost enough to incite the Armenians to rebel. Admitting that there had been act of brutal crucity, it was only just to say that Turkey had acted much better than in former times, with an honest desire to suppress injustice and to punish disorder. The worst service it was possible to do the Armenians was to induce Turkey to suppose that a revolution was likely, and after the language just heard he was afraid it was hopeless to approach the Porte in the expectation of great concessions.

Prof. Bryce complained that the Government was keeping the House in ignorance of events in Armenia and was neglecting to make a proper inquiry. The failure to convict Moussa Bey had encouraged his adherents to commit crimes similar to those charged against their leader. Prof. Bryce suggested that the Government endeavor to get the powers to join in sending a stronger remonstrance to the Sultan.

How a Woman Passed a $1,000 Counter-feit Bill in Boston.

There is a $1,000 counterfeit not in the Washington with an interesting story. One morning not so very long ago a handsomely-dressed lady entered one of the largest drygood houses in Boston, and, after selecting a shawl worth $259, tendered a genuine $1,000 bill in payment. The note was of course carefully scrutinized and finally sent to a neighboring bank, where it was vouched for. When the lady was informed of its acceptance she became indignant and expressed in nameasured terms her opinion of a firm that would for a moment suspect her honesty.

became indignant and expressed in nemeasured terms her opinion of a firm that would for a moment suspect her honesty. So wrathy was she, indeed, that she refused to take the shawl, and, replacing the money in her pocketbook, left the store.

Later in the day she returned. Her anger had disappeared, and she explained that having walked all over Boston without being able to find a shaw! that suited her, she had returned to apologize for her hasty action, and to take the shaw! she had first selected. Again she tenndered a $1,000 note—not a genuine one this time, but aclosely executed counterfeit.

Of course the firm accepted the money—believing it to be the genuine note—without question, and the woman departed with her shawl and $750 in change. The swindle was not discovered until the counterfeit was rejected at the bank. The note was then sent to the Secret Service Bureau, where its history is occasionally relaced to interested visitors. The woman was nevez-caught.—[Washington Post.
