LOST WHEEL RECOVERED.

Edward Towe, who lost his wheel on Wednesday last, recovered it this morning. The secret of its disappearance was a case of mistaken identity of wheel. Mr. Towe had left his wheel standing in front of McCallum's drug store, and near it was the wheel of Street Car Conductor McKellar. The latter was ordered to take out a car, and asked a fellow-employe, named McKnight, to take care of his wheel. The latter took what he supposed to be McKellar's wheel, and rode it to the car barns, and it was not till this week. morning that it was discovered that it was Mr. Towe's wheel that he had taken. McKellar and McKnight at once brought the wheel to the police station and Mr. Towe was sent for. Explanations followed, and the wheel left the police station in the possession of its rightful owner.

DIPLOMACY OF INACTION. Some of the Conspicuous Characteristics of the Chinese Tsung-li-Yamen-

Queer Foreign Office. For masterly inactivity and deplorable deafness and dumbness the Chinese tsung-li-yamen leads the world. This institution is something like the foreign offices of other nations. It is a buffer between the rulers of China to sift through the tsung-li-yamen before it reaches Celestial royalty. The yamen has much dignity but no authority. It can only mutely listen to representations from the ministers and promise to call the attention of higher authorities to the matter. It cannot take positive action, though it pretends to do so. Concerning the office and its functions. Archibald R. Colquhoun, the well-known traveler and author, says in his book on

'China In Transformation:' "The Tsung-li-yamen, or office of foreign affairs, was established by Imperial decree in January, 1861. It was the first step made by the imperial authorities to admit of diplomatic relations in the capital. was originally composed of three ministers, who were also members of other boards, but its numbers increased from time to time, and now stands at eighty-three Mantchoos and five Chinese. The new creation never acquired any authority until the pressure of external events compelled the emperor's council to make use of it, and to recognize it as an integral part of the government. It was not until 1890 that it first figured in the red book, a complete record of state departments.

The tsung.li-yamen was at first a disappointment. It fell into the condition of an ordinary government de-partment, with several vices of its own, an institution for the prevention of business. Its fatal incapacity lay in the fact that it was a body without a head, for, though they were always a nominal president, he absented himself when he chose.

The yamen, until forced into greater activity by events resulting from the Japanese war, served merely as the cold water which extinguished the hot irons thrust into it by the arder of the foreign agents. To transact business with the board was declared by Sir Harry Parkes to be a physical tour de force. Sir R. Alcock more minutely described it in The Fortnightly Review, May, 1876. "'It is beating the air,' he said,

'to talk to them of treaty rights and obligations, the claims of justice or benefits that accru to them, as to us, by a more liberal policy. The tyro in such work is at first charmed with the courtesy and patience shown in listening to what he hopes may prove convincing arguments.

'they are even met, in roply with a certain show of appreciative intelligence and a willingness to be better informed. When, however, many such interviews have exhausted the subject, perhaps at a final meeting for the purpose of settlement, when there is many there is nothing more to be said on either side, his proposal to settle terms of agreement is met by a request in the loudest accents, with a perfectly unmoved countenance, to explain what is wanted, as he is ready to hear!'

"And the modus operandi was still more minutely depicted by a correspondent of The Times in 1884, cited in the 'Life of Sir Harry Parkes,' by Stanley Lane Poole. He says:

They commence by delicate plaisanterie of offering refreshments which they know their visitors wont touch, and the attendants know the art of killing time by bringing in the repast dish by dish. The visitor sits meanwhile on a hard seat in a cheerless room. At last, when the melon seeds have been distributed in saucers all over the table on which the foreigner would have liked to spread his papers, business is supposed to commence. "And now," observes the visitor, "what is your answer about the robbery of merchandise belonging to Mr. Smith of Nam-kwei?" One of their rules is that no one shall speak at each other and keep silence until one, bolder than the rest, opens his of his comrades, who watch the reckless man in hope that he will drop something which may hereafter serve in a charge against him. What he does say is "Take some of these walnuts." Then follows a discussion on the merits of walnuts. When they do speak, they all speak at once; what they say can be neither under-
