The Influence of Food on the Flesh - Ani mals That Feople Eat.

[Forest and Stream.]

Many of the readers of Forest and Stream are old enough to recall the eated arguments which appeared in the sportsman's literature years ago, between those persons who declared that the canvasback in his excellence head, seriously injured. was found nowhere except in Chesa-Melvin Harvey, gashes in head, arm peake Eay, and their opponents who said that canvasbacks were found all Russell Gist, wounded about head over the country and were equally good everywhere. The first party based their contention on the premise that the wild celery was found only in the Chesapeake Bay, and declared that except when fattened on a diet of wild celery the canvasback was no better than a coot. Of course we know today that both these parties were wrong and both were right, and the quarrel between them has long been one of those dead issues which has been laid away with a thousand others to sleep the sleep that knows no waking. It flesh. If the coot and the old squaw are poor eating, it is because they subsist almost altogether on a diet of clams and other shell fish. The grainfed whistler is as good to eat as his fish-fed brother of the seacoast is worthless.

But while there are a great many familiar facts bearing on this subject which are known to everyone, there are also some others that are unknown and that are curious and interesting. Nothing is more common to country dwellers than to find in the early spring the milk of cows tainted with garlic. The wild leek, being one of the first green things to appear in the spring, is greedily devoured by the cows newly turned out to pasture, passes from the food into the circulation, and so taints the milk. No doubt if a cow yielding this milk were to be butchered and her flesh cooked, it would be found both to taste and smell

It may not be so generally known that in early spring the wild sheep of the Rocky Mountains, like domestic cattle, nibble with relish the new springing wild onions, and if killed at this season the flesh tastes strongly of the plant. Who knows whether the flesh of the deer and elk may not be similarly affected by this or some other plant. Happily, not many of these animals are killed in the spring. The Indians of portions of California declare that in early spring the quail eat the leaves of the wild onion, and that their flesh becomes worthless for food at this season because of the strong odor of onions which pervades

It is a well-known fact that the flesh of the spruce grouse and of Franklin's grouse in the winter season, when the ground is snow covered and their food is largely the buds and leaves of spruce and pine, acquires a strongly resinous taste which is at first unpleasant, though one readily becomes used to it. More familiar still is the fact that the ruffed grouse which has fed on the buds and leaves the laurel often acquires a strongly bitter taste. On the other hand, it may well be that in this last case the taste of the flesh may come merely from absorption by the muscles of the flavor of the stomach contents of birds that have hung long without dressing. Old trappers know very well that the flesh of the beaver has a strong taste of willow and cottonwood bark, and ver could be in doubt as to the food that he was masticating, even though his eyes were blindfolded a hundred times. To come back to more familiar and homely examples, it has often happened that the eggs of hens in Florida were pervaded by a strangely bitter taste which the owners of the fowls were quite unable to account for, and has taken a long investigation to fact that the hens were eating orange seeds. When they were prevented from consuming this food, the taste of the

In bygone years—and very likely to Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Robb are in St. that the chickens fed so freely on dead eggs and flesh alike became tainted. It is also a notorious fact that on portions of the coast and on certain streams in the northwest hogs cannot be killed during the salmon run because their flesh is too fishy to be eaten. The flesh of bears at certain points on the same coast is reported to be so fishy at the close of the salmon run that even the natives will not eat it. On the other hand, years ago there used to be special brands of hams sold in Cincinnati which purported to be of rare excellence because the hogs from which they were taken had fed on chestnuts or other mast

All of which shows that the illness from which the King of the Cannibal Islands suffered after partaking of ar old sailor whose diet for many years had consisted of tobacco, salt horse and rum, may not have been due entirely to his majesty's imagination.

Business Maxims That Are Up-to-Date.

George Ade contributes to the Century's "Year of American Humor" a "Modern Fable of the Old Fox and the consulted Dr. Reeves, the eye special- Young Fox," printed in the March number. Here is some of the former's sage advice:

"Get acquainted with the Heads of Departments and permit the subor-dinates to become acquainted with

"Always be easily Familiar with those who are termed Great in the Public Prints. They are so accustomed to Deference and Humility, it is a positive relief to meet a jaunty equal. "The first sign of Extravagance is buy Trousers that one does not need. Every Young Man on a Salary should beware of the Trousers Habit. "Do not give Alms promiseuously. Select the Unworthy Poor and make them Happy. To give to the Deserving is a Duty, but to help the Improvident Drinking Class is clear Generosity, so that the Donor has a Right to be warmed by a Selfish Pride and count on a most flattering Obituary. "Never try to get into Society, so called. Those who Try seldom get in, and if they do edge through the Portals they always feel Clammy and Un-worthy when under the Scrutiny of the Elect. Sit outside and appear indifferent, and after a while they may Send for you. If not, it will be Money in your Pocket.

"Never Write when you can Telegraph, and in Wiring always use more than Ten Words. This is the Short Cut to being regarded as a Napoleon. The Extra Words cost only a few Cents, but they make a Profound Impression on the Recipient, and give the Sender a Standing which could not be obtained by an Expenditure of Four Dollars for a Birthday Gift. A man never feels more important than when he receives a Telegram containing more than Ten words." THE WRONG NUMBER. "It's an Al display," said Mr. Pitt, at the dog show. "It's a first-class exhibition," replied Mr. Penn, "but you've got the wrong number." "How so?" "Instead of A1 it is K9."
