If you had the value of the clothes rubbed to pieces yearly in the wash, you'd roll in wealth. Millions worth of clothing are thrown away yearly, worn out by washing. Save your part anyway. Wash with Pearline; it does away with the rubbing; everything washed with Pearline lasts much longer. PEARLINE washing is easy, quick, economical.

Don't Drudge-Use Pearline

Maria Bloor fell into her niche in her aunt's home with wonderful quickness. In 24 hours Mrs. Bloor hardly knew how she had done without her. She answered all the tradesmen's rings, waited upon Jasper, who was now the only gentleman occupying his chambers in 24B Park View, and made herself useful in a hundred ways.

"She's no beauty," Mrs. Bloor confided to her husband, "but I don't know when I've met a nicer, more ob-liging girl; and if it wasn't for those ugly goggle glasses, and her dark skin, black hair, I don't really think she'd be bad looking. She's got rather a pretty way of turning her head, and her hands are beautiful in shape, if they are dark in color. I wonder if there was a touch of the tar brush on the mother's side?"

Maria was certainly plain. Her eyes no one at Park View had ever seen. Her skin was almost as dark as the skin of an Indian. Her black hair was coarse and frizzy, and came down in an ugly way over her ears; her mouth, however, was beautiful.

Jasper found himself looking at it sometimes, even while he told himself she was the plainest girl he had ever seen; her nose, too, was good, but the black fringe coming down to the top of the black goggle glasses made the lower part of the face look heavy. "Do you know," he said to her once, look a different creature if you'd do away with that brute of a fringle, and those glasses. What's the matter with your eyes? Why don't you have them seen to? It's a woman's duty to try and look attractive." Maria only giggled. She seldom did more in the presence of Jasper. She was shy of him, and did not come to nis rooms when he was in them more than she could help: though she seemed to love to fuss about them when he absent, dusting and putting to

'You're like all girls," Mrs. Bloor said, "wonderfully interested in a bachelor's room; but you must know everything there is in Mr. Warne's by a few days, as I suppose I must soon. You knew, did you not, that I have another visit to pay?" Mrs. Bloor repeated.

Maria nodded. 'Yes," she answered. Mother sprung it upon me at the last minute; it's some of her people. I don't want to go, I'm sure. They live in the County of Essex, if you know where that is." "To be sure," Mrs. Bloor returned. "That's not far. Well, I suppose it's right you should visit your mother's people, Maria. I wonder whether you take after them. You're not a bit like our family. We were always personable—but I shall miss go out." "What ears you have!" Mrs. Bloor said; "though, to be sure"—and she looked at the frizzled curtain of Maria's hair-"I have never seen them."

Maria did a strange thing when she entered Jasper's room that day; she shut the door, and slipped the bolt. "Goodness knows what excuse I shall make if he comes back!" she said to herself; "but I can't be disturbed. Now, I wonder where I had better look? And I wonder what I'm really looking for?" She took off her glasses, and her eyes—beautiful eyes that did not look in the least degree weak-were sparkling like diamonds. She pushed back the thick coarse hair from her brow, then she looked round.

"If I had a secret," she said, half aloud. "if I were a man and this room mine, where should I keep it? Should

I hide it? Or, under the circumstances, believing no suspicion could fall upon me, should I just leave it where it had always been?" A man's belongings do not, as a rule, take up very much room. He does not cupboard and wardrobe room which a woman is obliged to have. If a woman has a secret, there are a hundred places in which she may keep it: if a man has one, it is generally among his papers. Maria crossed to Jasper's desk, after a moment, and found, as she had expected, that it was locked. This, however, did not deter her. She whipped a number of strange-looking keys from her pocket, and Jasper's correspondence was soon at her mercy. She lifted papers and letters quickly.

There were papers in it which proved Jasper heavily in the debt of the Jew, Moses Cohen, but, at first sight, there seemed nothing more. Maria did not possess one of these ordinary cash-boxes, and was just shutting it when it struck her there was a good deal of room wasted in the middle of this one. She investigated matters, and found she could move a slide. Under this slide' there were papers, and a bent photograph. She took them out eagerlythey were letters written from a wo-

CHAPTER XXV.

"Not at home?" "No, sir." Jasper looked surprised. Leslie had said: "Come every day," and for the third time when he had called she had been out. Had her belief veered round again? Women's minds-what little they possessed-were, of course, like weathercocks. Had she, in some way, recognized a possibility of the innocence of a man who had run away And for that reason, was she angry with him?

"I think Miss Bell has left town," the man volunteered, "but Mrs. Strangeways is at home. Would you like to see her?

Jasper stepped into the hall.
"Thank you," he answered, and was shown into the drawing-room. Mrs. Strangeways joined him very

"I'm so sorry I was out each time heart now."

"And yet," Maria said, "I shall be sorry to go away from here even for a few days as I suppose I must soon.

I can't do much more. Leslie has just taken herself off. She says she has property to look after; so she has, of course, heaps of property in the country, and here, in London, somewhere, Hampstead way, I think-houses full of furniture and servants. I'm afraid this disappearance of Mr. Philip Gilchrist's has upset her very much, and she feels she must be on the move, doing something. I don't at all approve of her running about like this: still, what can I do? She's her own mistress. I've no authority - none whatever."

> "But, surely," Jasper said, waiting for Mrs. Strangeways to take a seat, then sitting down himself, his hat held lightly in his hands, "surely you know where she is?"

more than the man in the moon," Mrs. Strangeways answered. "Probably not so much. She was very nuch excited after you called that day at breakfast time, laughing, crying, going on like a mad thing; denouncing someone-Philip, I suppose, but she mentioned no name—in good round terms. My own private opinion is that this trouble, coming on the top of the fortune, has sent her a little off her head. Well," Mrs. Strangeways changed the subject quickly, "an more news of Mr. Philip Gilchrist?"

"None," Jasper returned, leaning forward, and tracing the pattern of the carpet with his stick. "Probably he's on his way to America or Spain, or some of those place, by now. But I can't trouble to think of him. He's" -he hesitated a moment and a queer, puzzled look came into his eyes-"he's made his bed, and must lie on it. But, Leslie-we must search for her. for her. She's a free woman-absolutely free." 'Why? I've no authority to search Jasper laughed. "Oh, dear, no," he answered. "No woman-at least, no woman in anything of a set-is a free woman. She's bound by conventionality; tied to the apron strings of Mrs Grundy. Besides, she asked me to come every day and report." "In a moment of excitement, yet; in another, she went off. Besides, you've nothing to report. Wherever she is, the newspapers will tell her all you could." Jasper looked up and laughed. "I don't know so much about that,"

Smallpox vaccine must be a beneficial invigorator when applied properly.Galt has been under a quarantine nearly all winter, and the players say that they have been able to practice very little. The skin-scratching process which the players underwent, must have made up this. Pickard, rover for Galt, made the first tally for Galt, and throughout the game did a lot of clever stick-work. Rough play was a minus feature of the game, and only a couple of men were ruled off. Galt did not attempt to do dirty work, and the St. John's team did not return evil for good. McGuffin, McMahen and Gauthier played splen-Crawford could be obtained. His play defense was very strong, and all shooting of the St. John's generally went keeper. McGuffin and McMahen seldom failed to check the Galt men. The checking was not of the heavy kind. The Galts had the best style of combination. In rushing together they spread out more than the St. John's and were consequently able to have greater range for shooting. St. John's worked their combination in a wedge-shape, so that when the puck was taken to the other end of the rink the players were generally huddled together, and more apt to go wide of the mark. Rodgers, the latest find in the way of goal-keepers, saved many a goal for the locals. Some of his stops were wonderful, and many moments of nervous suspense were alleviated by his clever turning off of the puck. The score at half-time was 5 to 0. Had the St. John's played the same game at first as they did in the last half they would likely have won. Additional vigor was added, and the Galt was pressed hard. McMahen came out on top out of many hard struggles, and sometimes took the puck from a couple of his opponents. AGONIZING STOMACH PAINS!

Messrs, RADWAY & CO.:

Dear Sirs,—I know a business man on the east side of town who has for years been alling and suffering agonizing pains in the stomach. The doctors, from Prof. Jacoby down to others by the dozens, could neither effect a cure nor could they even tell what the malady was. He a few years ago, crossed the Atlantic to consult German doctors, without result. I used to call at his store every few months, and heard his tale of woe. He said while in he was never able to retain his food, and at certain times of the day he was attacked with an agonizing pain which lasted an hour or so, when he acted as a madman, breaking chairs, etc., and having to give up business for the time being. Food never staved on his stomach longer than half an hour. Yesterday, after a lapse of 18 months. I called again, and to my surprise, he was still alive, and looking well. I asked him about his health. He said he had been well for over a year, and gained 40 pounds in weight. I wanted to know what doctor had cured him. This is what he told me: About a year ago or over a man came to his store, telling him he had been sick very much the same as he was for some time, and tried Radway's Pills, which quickly cured him. He at once decided to use the pills. The druggist did not have any, and tried to give him another kind, but as he insisted on Radway's, they were procured for him the next day. He only took one at night, and he immediately felt better. He kept up for a time to take the pills, and from the first day to this his malady never returned.
