In the fourth a single, a base on balls and an error got him in bad and in running to the plate to try to head off Jack Beatty he twisted his ankle and had to be carried off and obtain medical attention. Schoof succeeded him, and he pitched fine ball until the tenth, when the locals got two hits from him. In the fifth and eighth the locals worked a man to third with two down, and each time he got the batter, while in the seventh Murphy, the first man up, singled and Stimpson let the ball through him, Murphy landing on third. Then Schoof fanned Donelson, and Orme rolled to Baker.

Puccots pitched nice ball for the locals, only 10 men facing him in the first three frames, but in the fourth Baker's single and Brower's triple plus a base on balls, and Rose's single netted the Tecs two well-earned runs. Haines succeeded him in the sixth and was only once in trouble, that being in the sixth, when the bags were all loaded, due to an error, a base on balls and a single by Kernan. THE SHIFTING SCENE.

Western Ontario used to be dotted with stock farms and almost every hamlet, town and village had an intimate knowledge of racing stables all the way from the one oat-bag kind to the more pretentious strings. Now there are only two stables, the Seagram stable of Water-loo, and J. E. Smallman's small but prominent London string.

London is still adjacent to the empty desolate site on which it was planned to building a racing plant, but London's glory in the Sport of Kings must lay in the past unless Smallman's two Plate entries come through this year.

BOXING'S GROWTH.

Boxing is growing every day, in every way. More and more the man in the street is coming to the realization that boxing, as it is practiced today, is not the brutal thing it may have been in other days. Some of the old-timers lament this fact. Those who were brought up on prizefighting are wont to refer to the "good old days," when the sport was almost universally frowned on, when it was necessary to elude the vigilance of the officers of the law to stage a fight in some barn or meadow with only a few hundred hardy souls in attendance. The cleaner, more scientific and less brutal fighting of today apparently

In Canada, the game is on a firmer and more stable footing today than ever before, and boxing is flourishing in practically every civic center, from Halifax to Vancouver. In the great majority of provinces, commission rule prevails, and this is slowly but surely ridding the game of its undesirable elements, and restoring it to the favor it enjoyed before fly-by-night promoters, grasping managers and crooked fighters, all with an eye only to their own gain, fed the public on set-ups, fixed bouts, substitute matches, false weights, and all the other forms of fistic fraud and thievery. Some of this still persists, everywhere, but the more alert promoters know that honestly-conducted and well-staged bouts are the only financial hope, and will not be parties even when

In the Maritime Provinces, there are one or two scattered civic commissions, while in other places, the local police keep a more or less vigilant eye on the sport. Quebec and Montreal have commissions. In other localities in Quebec province, the game has been pretty nearly killed by the sharp practices of visiting promoters, and if any other effort is made to promote the sport in these places, commissions probably will be formed to protect the public, and forestall the cheats. In Ontario, there is an excellent provincial commission which rules with a firm and competent hand, the same condition exists in Manitoba. civic commissions. flourishing in British Columbia, largely because of the exploits of Vic Foley, the Canadian bantamweight champion.

Some idea of how boxing is gripping the people of the United States, slowly but surely breaking down the bars of prejudice, may be had from the fact that two states, Kansas and West Virginia, which only a few years ago overwhelmed attempts to legalize the game. recently passed bills putting the ring game on an equal footing with baseball, football and other firmly established sports.

These are only two instances. Others could be cited. These two are mentioned because they bring home the point better that boxing not only has withstood the attacks of the so-called reformers, but has driven its detractors to defeat in some of their erstwhile strongholds.
