The Perils of the Deep. William Ward, the well-known Island constable, narrowly escaped a watery grave on Monday. While about six miles out in the lake in his fishing boat he was cought in the heavy gale from the northwest of that morning and found that he was un-able to pull ashore against it. By hoisting a sail he was barely able to run before the wind and reached Oakville harbor at a late hour in the day. After sundown, the wind having died away, Mr. Ward started to row for home and succeeded in reaching Toronto harbor shortly after midnight.

D. A ROW OVER A RIBBON.

Which position she has been known to the world at large as the Nun of Kenmare. She is noted for her piety, charity and the deep interest she takes in the growth of her religious faith. It is the purpose of the distinguished lady to give a series of lectures in this country to raise means sufficient to begin the ouilding of a grand cathedral in Nottingham, England, which, when completed, will only be surpassed by St. Peter's in Rome. While in Rome she established a new order of the sisterhood, and intends to start branches of it in all the large cities of this country and Ganada, where she will also lecture. The eminent where she will also lecture. The eminent lady was born in Mullingar, West Meath, and was a sister of Sir Robert Cusack, M.P. Her family was immensely wealthy, but Miss Cusack discarded all worldly considerations and entered the convent of Kenmare. same city, [this Toronto that you and I live in, but shey said such nasty things about each other, and behaved so badly, and used such ugly words, that all the nice people, like you and I, were horribly shocked, and at the same time very much amused. The names of these two old women, I must tell you, were Miss Globe and Miss Daily Mail.

Well one day as they had no children little boy whom they would wash and dress than dring up so nicely in order that when they were grown up they might send him to a great lady whose loyal subjects (I will try to explain that to you presently, it is a little difficult for you to understand), whose loyal subjects, I was saying, Miss Globe and Miss Mail pretended to be.

Well, one day the great lady said to Miss Globe's boy—his name I forgot to tell you was Edward, Edward Blake—the great lady said to Edward Blake that if he liked she would call him "Sir;" a funny thing to do, wasn't it? for "Sir" doesn't mean very much after all, does it? But The alarm at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon was for a fire in rear of Mrs. Cowan's house, 117 Queen street west. It was quickly put out.

Wm. King came to town from Brampton, got on a howl, fell in with a bad gang and was robbed of $50. All of which will last him until after Christmas.

John Flynn, a young man employed in to do, wasn't it? for "Sir" doesn't mean very much after all, does it? But this boy Edward pretended he did not care a pin whether he was called "Sir" or not—in fact would rather not. His pet aunt was very pleased, patted him on the back, and told him she was so glad he did not care about those stupid "titles" as she called them (that is another hard word that I do not think I can ever explain to you) great many of this aunt's—Aunt Globe's friends—thought so to. They said a "Sir' ought to be a very dignified, quiet, nice boy; that he ought to be a boy that lived with nice good people, not quarrelling aunts. But this has not much to do with the stew. What I was going to tell you was that the other boy—Johnny his name was—he too was offered all kinds of nice "titles" by the great lady. For although the great lady didn't think much of these two maiden aunts, yet these two boys were growing up to be big was and they lived in a very fine country. men, and they lived in a very fine country and the great lady thought that it would be a very "politic" thing (never mind what that means just now) to give them some well, this boy Johnny Macdonald, he cook everything that was given to him first "Sir," then "Rt. Hon.," as "K. C. B.," then "D. C. L.," the a piece of blue ribbon, and last of all—but this is the funniest part of my story, and I mustn't spoil it by telling it too fast. This boy Johnny once pretended to be sick, and said he was going to see a doctor that lived in the same country with the great lady.

His aunt let him go—at least I dare say he would have gone whether she let him or not. He went; the doctor told him he was all right (and ere I ought to tell you that all Johnny's eing sick; one said it was one thing, and another said it was another thing, and all the time it was nothing; was not that—shall we call it "strange?") Well, the long and the short of it is that when he was with the the short of it is that when he was with the great lady she gave him a greater "title" than he had ever had before. She dressed him in white boots, and red stockings, and red breeches — just think of that; she put a white silk hat on his head, and a great big collar with a real gold badge hanging from the left hand side. Oh! it was beautiful. And Aunt Mail was se glad and (it is very shocking to say so), but she really was very spiteful: She called Aunt Globe all sorts of names, names which I hope you very spiteful: She called Aunt Globs all sorts of names, names which I hope you will never even dream of using, names like "the organ," and said that "the organ" abused and lied with "farious vigor," that it sputtered, and fumed, and frotted, and frothed in "almost every conceivable kind of bad English and worse manable kind of bad English and worse manners;" that it was "in a state of discontent, mingled with stupidity, and vivified by malignity into quite an active state of poisonous activity;" that it "entertained vigorous enmity" and "expressed it in various illiterate fashions;" that it suffered from a sort of strabismus".

"suffered from a sort of strabismus"— that is a squint, you know; that it "made itself conspicuous by an insolent brutality of expression," and a lot of other things that I do not like to repeat.

Aunt Globe was just as bad: she tried to make fun of the G. C. B. She too called Aunt Mail "the organ;" and altogether although Aunt Globe was ready to cry her eyes out with vexation because her boy Edward hadn't accepted some-thing too, yet she tried to hide this by, as I told you before, making fun of Johnny and his honors.

And all this fuss was over a pretty new red and white suit, and the three little let-

Gentlemen requiring fine clothing to order will save time and money by going direct to Petleys'. Woman's Place in Society.

From the Chicago News.

Rev. Thomas E. Green preached th irst series of five sermons to young ladies at the Eighth presbyterian church Sunday night. "The female demagogues who are onstantly ranting about the tyranny which keeps a woman in the depths of degradation," he said, "are not on the in-crease to day. Woman's mission is writ-ten in her life. It is to make society em-bellish and beautify the home, stand by the side of man, his helpmeet, his comple-ment. Man's place is to get, maintain, and defend the home; here the ordering, comforting, and adorning it. The sphere is very unfashionable to-day. The fashionable education fits her for, and the fashion able education has her for, and the hashon-able mother pictures to her, an advan-tageous marriage, a life of ease and selfish uxury. The duties of wife, mother and housewife are not thought of. Thrice a failure is that woman's life who seeks, in a life of gayety and negligence, her own pleasure and betrays her trust. No nation in which a pure home-life is not found ever rang a song or built a cathedral that out lasted its memory."

Marriage by Telegraph Annulled. From the Indianapolis Journal. The divorce suit of Sarah Orten Welch against Thomas Welch came up before Judge Taylor yesterday. This is the case which has had such a wide notoriety by ewspaper publications. The woman claims that while a resident of Pittsburg in June, 1883, she answered a "personal" advertisement in the Cincinnati Equirer, as a result of which a correspondence sprang up between her and Welch, and they were married, the ceremony being performed by telegraph. When she came here to meet him she found that he was a colored man. In court the fact that he was a regred descent, was established also was of negro descent was established, al-though he insisted that his father was a. Spaniard and his mother a Frenchwoman. The marriage was declared void by the court. Welch is a barber.
