THE MERCHANT IN MAKING HIS purchases has to risk the market. There is really no certainty in business of any kind. The chances of a rise or fall belong to every market—even the gold market fluctuates as well as the fish market. It is this uncertainty that gives zest to commerce and offers field for the study of the balance between profit and loss. The landlord cannot establish a fixed standard of values for his land or houses, but must meet the market en a business basis.
