

FOUNDATIONS

A STATEMENT OF CHRISTIAN BELIEF IN TERMS OF MODERN THOUGHT

BY SEVEN OXFORD MEN:

B. H. STREETER, R. BROOK, W. H. MOBERLY, R. G. PARSONS,
A. E. J. RAWLINSON, N. S. TALBOT, W. TEMPLE.

Sixth Impression. 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.

CANON HASTINGS RASHDALL in the HIBBERT JOURNAL.—"A book which deserves to be treated very seriously. The ability of the individual writers is of a high order, but the importance of the work as a whole is much greater than that of any individual essay in it. . . . Foundations is a real attempt to construct a theology which shall be at once liberal and constructive. It is one of its best features that it would be difficult to characterise the whole book, or even each individual writer, as distinctively high, low, or broad. It may be that this book will constitute a turning-point in the history, not of a party, but of the Church of England and of the Church in England."

REV. ARTHUR W. ROBINSON, D.D., in the GUARDIAN.—"What of this book? Will it be a help or will it be a hindrance? I can reply without hesitation that I believe it will help us, and help us much. And I say this for three reasons. In the first place, the position of these essayists is indubitably, I might rather say is passionately, Christian. . . . The second characteristic of the book is suggested by what has just been said as to its criticism of the older forms of thought. It is unaffectedly modern. . . . Modern thoughts on the Bible, modern difficulties as to the Atonement, and Miracles, and Eschatology; the most modern forms of idealistic and pluralistic philosophy—all are brought up for consideration. There is no notion of shirking any of the questions that are challenging attention at the present moment, and all are debated with a keenness of understanding and a breadth of sympathy that are attractive and admirable. . . . Yet another outstanding feature of this book I would note. It is hopefully aggressive. That is to say, its attitude is not merely apologetic and defensive. . . . A book which is true to the best elements in the inheritance of the past, thoroughly alive to the requirements of the present, and entirely undismayed in its outlook upon the developments of the future."

DAILY NEWS.—"By far the most awakening contribution from theological Oxford since Lux Mundi. . . . Foundations has not, perhaps, quite the compelling charm that allured the reader of Lux Mundi; but in intellectual content, and in its grasp of modern necessities, it is not inferior to that volume."

LONDON: MACMILLAN AND CO., LTD.