A TOUR, THROUGH

Fires have frequently ravaged the upper and lower town, and the fuburbs.

The most memorable spot contiguous to Quebec, is Abraham's plain. This is an extensive flat ground about a mile in width, extending in a line with the river towards the fouth-weft. Near the river the bank rifes fuddenly, and forms a precipice not eafily to be afcended. On the north fide, this hill gradually defcends to the river St. Charles. The neighbouring region then rifes in a gentle flope, and we are entertained with a view of the pleafant country, farm houses, and villages, until the profpect is loft in the diftant hills and the horizon. On this plain Wolf fell. The fpot is fhewn, but it is not marked by any monument to diffinguish it. He landed at a place now called Wolf's cove, made by the river, covered by the circular form of the neighboring height or precipice. He afcended by an hollow way, which nature had formed by a fmall rivulet caufed by rains from the water collected on the plain.

Nature had thus prepared a landing place and a pass from the beach, which was covered from the view of the besieged, and gave an opportunity to surprize the enemy within the walls.
