President Comiskey, hoping that Jones would reconsider his determination to retire from baseball in favor of private business interests in the Pacific Northwest, offered him a salary said to be greater than that received by any member of President Taft's cabinet.

Sullivan has long been a mainstay of Comiskey's playing staff. He is regarted as one of the best catchers in any league and Kling's equal in the throwing, is a steady tho not sensational batsman and a fleet man on the bases. Above all this playing is at all times marked by clever headwork.
