A CHEAP FARM HOUSE.

It is often the case, particularly in settling new countries, that a many wants something that will answer for immediate shelter, and which he would be glad so to build, that it might, by and by, form part of the house—to construct upon a good design part of ahouse this year, and part next—year, and perhaps another part another year. It is for the benefit of this class that the following plan of a house has been made, which is not decigned to have a single tenon or mortice in the frame, except in the sills, all the upright timber being very light, and held together only; by nails.
