

THE EVENING TIMES AND STAR, ST. JOHN, N. B., SATURDAY, AUGUST 21, 1915

PHILPS' Helps the Thrifty Housekeeper to Cut Down Expenses!

HAVE YOU EVER TRIED OUR PHONE SERVICE? CALL UP MAIN 886. LOOK AT THESE ATTRACTIVE CASH VALUES FOR FRIDAY AND SATURDAY:

25c bottle Macaroni or Pearl Onions or Walnut Pickles for Fresh Bonnets Strip Godfish 2 lbs. for 25c	25c	25c	25c
Fresh Shredded Cabbage 1 lb. for 25c	25c	25c	25c
Patterson's Camp Coffee the 25c bottle for 25c	25c	25c	25c
Rigeway's Tea, 1 lb. finely decocted tin 45c	45c	45c	45c
Old Brown Windsor Soap, large cakes 8c	8c	8c	8c
Imperial Peanut Butter, in bulk, 30c lb.	30c	30c	30c
Libby's Asparagus Tips, the 30c tin 10c	10c	10c	10c
Sulzer's Tomato Soup 10c tin	10c	10c	10c

PHILPS' Douglas Avenue and Main PHONE MAIN 886

PERSONAL AND SOCIAL NEWS OF THE WEEK IN ST. JOHN

Although society apparently continues to enjoy itself, the slightest call for patriotic work finds it up and ready. Some day the war work will make interesting reading, and the youths, too young now to understand what is being done, will then feel proud that their mothers and sisters played such an active part in the upkeep of the nation. Therefore if society seeks relief from the anxieties of the hour, by indulging in innocent pastimes, the habit is to be commended inasmuch as the patriotic worker will perform her self-imposed duties all the better for the recreation. Their majesties, the king and queen, recently attended a grand theatrical performance in London, held for the purpose of increasing one of the city's most important patriotic funds.

At the Cliff Club on Thursday evening, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Eason entertained at a handsomely arranged dinner in honor of their guest, Mrs. Burritt, of Montreal. Covers were laid for eighteen. The table was profusely decorated with cut flowers. Included among the guests were Mrs. Burritt, Mrs. F. E. Sayre, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Foster, Mrs. Bushy, Mrs. George K. McLeod, Mrs. Hannard (Winnipeg), Miss Helen Sidney Smith, Senator Thorne, Mr. E. H. Taylor, Mr. J. C. Harrison, Mr. F. Fraser.

For his guests, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Jones, of Montreal, Mr. R. Keltie Jones was host at dinner at the Manor House on Tuesday evening. The decorations consisted of carnations and roses. Those who enjoyed Mr. Jones' hospitality were Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Heber Vroom, Mr. and Mrs. Simon Jones, Mr. and Mrs. James Seely, Miss Edith Seely.

Miss Stone entertained at an enjoyable luncheon for Mrs. F. Stone, of Schenectady, New York, and Mrs. Sheraton, of Boston, on Monday at the Club, when wild flowers and ferns formed the central table decoration. Bridge was enjoyed after luncheon. Miss Stone's guests were Mrs. Sheraton, Mrs. Fred Stone, Mrs. Fred MacNeil, Mrs. Beer (Amherst), Mrs. Charles Logan, Mrs. Spangler, Mrs. Daniel Mullin, Mrs. George Blair, Mrs. Kent Seely, Mrs. D. B. Pidgeon, Mrs. Walter Gilbert, Miss Jane Stone.

A number of gentlemen belonging to the younger set, gave a very delightful dinner dance at the Manor House on Friday of last week, in honor of Miss Doris Seely's visitors, the Misses Thatcher and Partee. The dancing of these attractive young ladies from Bangor, Texas was a most artistic and graceful performance. Guests present were Mr. and Mrs. John E. Sayre, Miss Thatcher, Miss Partee, Mrs. Edith Schofield, Miss Doris DeVeber, Miss Dorothy Jack, Miss Isabel Jack, Miss Cudlip, Mr. Lawrence MacLaren, Mr. James Holly, Mr. Ian MacLaren, Mr. Laurens Seely, Mr. Ben Turnbull, Mr. Stuart McLeod.

Mr. and Mrs. George McKa, Blizard and Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Lockhart left on Thursday to spend a week camping out at Day's Lake.

Dr. Blois Harrington, of Philadelphia, is a welcome visitor in St. John. He is the guest of his brother, Mr. F. E. Harrington, Union street.

Mrs. W. J. Ambrose, Germain street, was hostess at an enjoyable bridge of five tables last Thursday, in honor of her sister, Mrs. Spring, of Toronto. Prizes were won by Mrs. Harold Schofield and Mrs. Frank Fairweather. The drawing room was artistically decorated with fragrant flowers of several varieties. Included among the guests were Mrs. Spring, Mrs. Vassie, Mrs. Keator, Mrs. Alward, Mrs. Murray MacLaren, Mrs. F. E. Sayre, Mrs. Sheraton, Mrs. Malcolm Mackay, Mrs. Stewart Skinner, Mrs. George K. McLeod, Mrs. Bushy, Mrs. Harold Schofield, Mrs. Burritt, Mrs. Lucien DeBury, Mrs. Sherwood Skinner, Mrs. Hazen Hannard, Mrs. Walter Foster, Miss Laura Hazen, Mrs. Frank Fairweather, Miss Helen Sidney Smith.

Of particular interest to society in St. John, is the engagement announced in Kingston (Ont.), on Wednesday of Miss Marie G. Carruthers, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Carruthers, Amherst, to Major C. F. Constantine, R.C.A., son of the late Col. Constantine. Miss Carruthers, whose mother is a daughter of the late Hon. and Mrs. Burpee, of this city, and niece of Mrs. George K. McLeod, is at present nursing in an English hospital.

Mrs. Edmund Breese is visiting Mrs. Clifford Dudley Dennison, at her summer home at Mountain Lake, New York.

The R. K. Y. C. dance held at their club house, Millville, on Thursday evening was a most delightful entertainment. About 150 guests were present. The grounds surrounding the club house were brilliantly illuminated by electric lights, one of which surrounded the tall flag pole on the building. Holder's orchestra played a splendid musical programme to which the feet of the dancers on Thursday at the residence of the president, Mrs. James Dever, Chipman Hill. Plans were formulated for carrying on philanthropic and patriotic work during the winter.

Mrs. McMillan and granddaughter, Mrs. and Mrs. W. Emerson, Brookline (Mass.), are guests of Mr. and Mrs. James Doody, Pagan Place.

Mr. Laurens Seely is in Fredericton, visiting his aunt, Mrs. Harry Steves.

Mrs. Dawson, of Montreal, is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Philip Palmer, Leinster street.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Jones, Montreal, are guests of Mr. R. Keltie Jones at MacLaren's Beach.

It would be a gracious act for those who have gardens to comply with a request made for flowers by the Knights of Pythias for their decoration day next Thursday. Two thousand bouquets are required.

Mrs. P. J. Warr and Miss Kate Olmsted, of Calais (Me.), are guests of their cousin, Mrs. G. H. Tapley, Wellington Row.

In Mr. George Hildard's yacht on Sunday last sailing up the St. John river were Mrs. Stephen Hall, Mrs. Charles Coster, Miss Dorothy Purdy, Mrs. Hill, Miss McKean and Miss Winnie Hall.

Miss Jean Garden has returned to 28 Wellington Row after visiting friends in Nelson and Shediac.

Mrs. J. Fenwick Fraser and Mrs. David P. Chisholm were weekend guests of Mrs. Fred MacNeill at Woodman's.

Little flower girls at a recent wedding in Vancouver were the Misses Lilian and Wilhelmina Godard, daughters of Captain and Mrs. H. H. Godard, formerly of this city.

All his friends will be pleased to hear that Capt. H. H. Smith, a former resident of St. John, has returned from injuries received while fighting in France that he is able to enjoy a life of ease. He is now in St. John, where he is finding a renewal of sympathy and a wish to help.

A Magnificent Spirit Many wounded there are always. But the spirit of the French people is magnificent, no sacrifice is too great to make. No economy too severe. All France has the utmost confidence in the soldiers and their general and everyone feels it is the time for endurance, economy and the long and hard struggle for France.

Yesterday I met at tea a French duchess, last year the most frivolous and worldly person; always dressed in the height of fashion and devoted to golf, bridge and motorizing. Yesterday she was dressed in a cheap, ready-made black dress, with a black straw sailor hat, trimmed with a black taffeta bow, such as a poor governess would wear.

And she said she was proud to wear the uniform of a Red Cross nurse, a virginal testimony to their real nature and pitying passion for the helpless.

What a few awful months of the world's war means to us over here you who continue to live much as usual can hardly have little conception. To you the pageant and tragedy of war is as "a tale that is told." Very horrible, perhaps, but of necessity it cannot affect you intimately. You can know little of the heart-rending, day-by-day experience, the hourly ordeals demanded of men and women of France.

A Mother's Example Some few weeks ago I attended a class for "First Aid to the Injured," whose matron was rather a formidable French woman laden with years and honors. As I went in a friendly Red Cross nurse, I received a telegram two hours ago announcing the death of both her sons, but you know her husband was killed and now she has given her boys to France. She does not want it to be mentioned. Do not refer to it." As I looked at the wrinkled, but composed countenance, so stern and so calm, as I listened to her instruction given in a quiet manner, and with unfaltering faith, her home forever desolated, her old age a hideous empty blank, but she came down nevertheless to show us how to bandage the wounds of men, to teach us patience, endurance and control under all circumstances. At night she returns to her lonely hearth to mourn those brave boys, but did she not need our sympathy?

To us watching this superb example she seemed to embody the spirit of courage, which admits no defeat. The valiant heart rising above the wreck of happiness and home, to do its duty to La Patrie.

Only a short distance separates us from the battlefields where the manhood of France and England are daily laying down their lives in defence of their country. To us who have remained in France, life has become a very reality, as we go forth in sober garb and spirit to do what we can for these suffering hundreds, wounded men and boys, lonely young widows, stricken parents. We realize intensely that life in Europe has utterly changed. The order of things has passed away. What will replace it?

Instead of the ordinary headstone Mrs. Edwin L. Hasler has had built in the Lake Forest Cemetery of Chicago a memorial to her husband a fountain in the water of which a family of wren birds, as we go forth in sober garb and spirit to do what we can for these suffering hundreds, wounded men and boys, lonely young widows, stricken parents. We realize intensely that life in Europe has utterly changed. The order of things has passed away. What will replace it?

Many boys of them, this checked, red colored, bright-eyed but crippled for life. Older men, fathers of families, bronzed and calm, thankful to be in France, with the thought of soon returning to their wives and children.

May they there regain their health and strength. To these brave ones we all owe an immense debt of gratitude. But when they return, we may be facing now a very different outlook.

What impressed me above all is their modesty, their patriotism. Whether they are doctors or lawyers, peasants or little artisans they all show the same patient, patriotic spirit. They count their sufferings as nothing compared to the welfare of the nation.

The life of the last ten years which we knew and loved so well has vanished like the snows of yester year. Where were the palaces, the rich and the poor, the hospitals, the music of the harp, the gay young girls of other days who laughed and flirted and danced in these airy halls, are now demure Red Cross nurses in severe white linen gowns, the Red Cross emblems on their white wrists, a virginal testimony to their real nature and pitying passion for the helpless.

What a few awful months of the world's war means to us over here you who continue to live much as usual can hardly have little conception. To you the pageant and tragedy of war is as "a tale that is told." Very horrible, perhaps, but of necessity it cannot affect you intimately. You can know little of the heart-rending, day-by-day experience, the hourly ordeals demanded of men and women of France.

A Mother's Example Some few weeks ago I attended a class for "First Aid to the Injured," whose matron was rather a formidable French woman laden with years and honors. As I went in a friendly Red Cross nurse, I received a telegram two hours ago announcing the death of both her sons, but you know her husband was killed and now she has given her boys to France. She does not want it to be mentioned. Do not refer to it." As I looked at the wrinkled, but composed countenance, so stern and so calm, as I listened to her instruction given in a quiet manner, and with unfaltering faith, her home forever desolated, her old age a hideous empty blank, but she came down nevertheless to show us how to bandage the wounds of men, to teach us patience, endurance and control under all circumstances. At night she returns to her lonely hearth to mourn those brave boys, but did she not need our sympathy?

To us watching this superb example she seemed to embody the spirit of courage, which admits no defeat. The valiant heart rising above the wreck of happiness and home, to do its duty to La Patrie.

Only a short distance separates us from the battlefields where the manhood of France and England are daily laying down their lives in defence of their country. To us who have remained in France, life has become a very reality, as we go forth in sober garb and spirit to do what we can for these suffering hundreds, wounded men and boys, lonely young widows, stricken parents. We realize intensely that life in Europe has utterly changed. The order of things has passed away. What will replace it?

Instead of the ordinary headstone Mrs. Edwin L. Hasler has had built in the Lake Forest Cemetery of Chicago a memorial to her husband a fountain in the water of which a family of wren birds, as we go forth in sober garb and spirit to do what we can for these suffering hundreds, wounded men and boys, lonely young widows, stricken parents. We realize intensely that life in Europe has utterly changed. The order of things has passed away. What will replace it?

Many boys of them, this checked, red colored, bright-eyed but crippled for life. Older men, fathers of families, bronzed and calm, thankful to be in France, with the thought of soon returning to their wives and children.

May they there regain their health and strength. To these brave ones we all owe an immense debt of gratitude. But when they return, we may be facing now a very different outlook.

What impressed me above all is their modesty, their patriotism. Whether they are doctors or lawyers, peasants or little artisans they all show the same patient, patriotic spirit. They count their sufferings as nothing compared to the welfare of the nation.

The life of the last ten years which we knew and loved so well has vanished like the snows of yester year. Where were the palaces, the rich and the poor, the hospitals, the music of the harp, the gay young girls of other days who laughed and flirted and danced in these airy halls, are now demure Red Cross nurses in severe white linen gowns, the Red Cross emblems on their white wrists, a virginal testimony to their real nature and pitying passion for the helpless.

What a few awful months of the world's war means to us over here you who continue to live much as usual can hardly have little conception. To you the pageant and tragedy of war is as "a tale that is told." Very horrible, perhaps, but of necessity it cannot affect you intimately. You can know little of the heart-rending, day-by-day experience, the hourly ordeals demanded of men and women of France.

A Mother's Example Some few weeks ago I attended a class for "First Aid to the Injured," whose matron was rather a formidable French woman laden with years and honors. As I went in a friendly Red Cross nurse, I received a telegram two hours ago announcing the death of both her sons, but you know her husband was killed and now she has given her boys to France. She does not want it to be mentioned. Do not refer to it." As I looked at the wrinkled, but composed countenance, so stern and so calm, as I listened to her instruction given in a quiet manner, and with unfaltering faith, her home forever desolated, her old age a hideous empty blank, but she came down nevertheless to show us how to bandage the wounds of men, to teach us patience, endurance and control under all circumstances. At night she returns to her lonely hearth to mourn those brave boys, but did she not need our sympathy?

To us watching this superb example she seemed to embody the spirit of courage, which admits no defeat. The valiant heart rising above the wreck of happiness and home, to do its duty to La Patrie.

Only a short distance separates us from the battlefields where the manhood of France and England are daily laying down their lives in defence of their country. To us who have remained in France, life has become a very reality, as we go forth in sober garb and spirit to do what we can for these suffering hundreds, wounded men and boys, lonely young widows, stricken parents. We realize intensely that life in Europe has utterly changed. The order of things has passed away. What will replace it?

Instead of the ordinary headstone Mrs. Edwin L. Hasler has had built in the Lake Forest Cemetery of Chicago a memorial to her husband a fountain in the water of which a family of wren birds, as we go forth in sober garb and spirit to do what we can for these suffering hundreds, wounded men and boys, lonely young widows, stricken parents. We realize intensely that life in Europe has utterly changed. The order of things has passed away. What will replace it?

You can wash the nickelled oven like you wash a kitchen dish, thereby keeping your sweet, clean, hygienic. Nickel draws heat-you get a hot oven with less fuel. Ask the McClary dealer.

McClary's Gas-kata Range

Sold by J. E. Wilson, Ltd., City Agent; Quinn & Co., North End Agent; R. Chestnut & Sons, Fredericton Agent; Summer Company, Moncton Agent; Boyle Bros., Ennisville Agent.

The following letter to a friend in this country from a writer on the spot gives a vivid picture of present day life in war-ridden France, with many intimate glimpses of hospital life and the gratitude of the French for the gifts to them from this country.

The letter follows: Val Fleuri Dinard, France, July 15, 1915.

I am inclosing a report which I hope will interest you, and showing you how we were able to distribute the many magnificent gifts sent to us for the wounded and the refugees. This dreadful war goes on and on, there seems to be no end to the demands on one's purse and patience, but one must not lose courage, but take one's best and determination in hand. Set one's teeth, and to use vulgar language, "Get on to it."

There are 4,000 wounded in Dinard this day for chemicals, and bandages, antiseptic cotton, socks and bandages never diminishes. I, fortunately, have a request made for flowers by the Knights of Pythias for their decoration day next Thursday. Two thousand bouquets are required.

Mrs. P. J. Warr and Miss Kate Olmsted, of Calais (Me.), are guests of their cousin, Mrs. G. H. Tapley, Wellington Row.

In Mr. George Hildard's yacht on Sunday last sailing up the St. John river were Mrs. Stephen Hall, Mrs. Charles Coster, Miss Dorothy Purdy, Mrs. Hill, Miss McKean and Miss Winnie Hall.

Miss Jean Garden has returned to 28 Wellington Row after visiting friends in Nelson and Shediac.

Mrs. J. Fenwick Fraser and Mrs. David P. Chisholm were weekend guests of Mrs. Fred MacNeill at Woodman's.

Little flower girls at a recent wedding in Vancouver were the Misses Lilian and Wilhelmina Godard, daughters of Captain and Mrs. H. H. Godard, formerly of this city.

All his friends will be pleased to hear that Capt. H. H. Smith, a former resident of St. John, has returned from injuries received while fighting in France that he is able to enjoy a life of ease. He is now in St. John, where he is finding a renewal of sympathy and a wish to help.

A Magnificent Spirit Many wounded there are always. But the spirit of the French people is magnificent, no sacrifice is too great to make. No economy too severe. All France has the utmost confidence in the soldiers and their general and everyone feels it is the time for endurance, economy and the long and hard struggle for France.

Yesterday I met at tea a French duchess, last year the most frivolous and worldly person; always dressed in the height of fashion and devoted to golf, bridge and motorizing. Yesterday she was dressed in a cheap, ready-made black dress, with a black straw sailor hat, trimmed with a black taffeta bow, such as a poor governess would wear.

And she said she was proud to wear the uniform of a Red Cross nurse, a virginal testimony to their real nature and pitying passion for the helpless.

What a few awful months of the world's war means to us over here you who continue to live much as usual can hardly have little conception. To you the pageant and tragedy of war is as "a tale that is told." Very horrible, perhaps, but of necessity it cannot affect you intimately. You can know little of the heart-rending, day-by-day experience, the hourly ordeals demanded of men and women of France.

A Mother's Example Some few weeks ago I attended a class for "First Aid to the Injured," whose matron was rather a formidable French woman laden with years and honors. As I went in a friendly Red Cross nurse, I received a telegram two hours ago announcing the death of both her sons, but you know her husband was killed and now she has given her boys to France. She does not want it to be mentioned. Do not refer to it." As I looked at the wrinkled, but composed countenance, so stern and so calm, as I listened to her instruction given in a quiet manner, and with unfaltering faith, her home forever desolated, her old age a hideous empty blank, but she came down nevertheless to show us how to bandage the wounds of men, to teach us patience, endurance and control under all circumstances. At night she returns to her lonely hearth to mourn those brave boys, but did she not need our sympathy?

To us watching this superb example she seemed to embody the spirit of courage, which admits no defeat. The valiant heart rising above the wreck of happiness and home, to do its duty to La Patrie.

Only a short distance separates us from the battlefields where the manhood of France and England are daily laying down their lives in defence of their country. To us who have remained in France, life has become a very reality, as we go forth in sober garb and spirit to do what we can for these suffering hundreds, wounded men and boys, lonely young widows, stricken parents. We realize intensely that life in Europe has utterly changed. The order of things has passed away. What will replace it?

Instead of the ordinary headstone Mrs. Edwin L. Hasler has had built in the Lake Forest Cemetery of Chicago a memorial to her husband a fountain in the water of which a family of wren birds, as we go forth in sober garb and spirit to do what we can for these suffering hundreds, wounded men and boys, lonely young widows, stricken parents. We realize intensely that life in Europe has utterly changed. The order of things has passed away. What will replace it?

Many boys of them, this checked, red colored, bright-eyed but crippled for life. Older men, fathers of families, bronzed and calm, thankful to be in France, with the thought of soon returning to their wives and children.

May they there regain their health and strength. To these brave ones we all owe an immense debt of gratitude. But when they return, we may be facing now a very different outlook.

What impressed me above all is their modesty, their patriotism. Whether they are doctors or lawyers, peasants or little artisans they all show the same patient, patriotic spirit. They count their sufferings as nothing compared to the welfare of the nation.

The life of the last ten years which we knew and loved so well has vanished like the snows of yester year. Where were the palaces, the rich and the poor, the hospitals, the music of the harp, the gay young girls of other days who laughed and flirted and danced in these airy halls, are now demure Red Cross nurses in severe white linen gowns, the Red Cross emblems on their white wrists, a virginal testimony to their real nature and pitying passion for the helpless.

What a few awful months of the world's war means to us over here you who continue to live much as usual can hardly have little conception. To you the pageant and tragedy of war is as "a tale that is told." Very horrible, perhaps, but of necessity it cannot affect you intimately. You can know little of the heart-rending, day-by-day experience, the hourly ordeals demanded of men and women of France.

A Mother's Example Some few weeks ago I attended a class for "First Aid to the Injured," whose matron was rather a formidable French woman laden with years and honors. As I went in a friendly Red Cross nurse, I received a telegram two hours ago announcing the death of both her sons, but you know her husband was killed and now she has given her boys to France. She does not want it to be mentioned. Do not refer to it." As I looked at the wrinkled, but composed countenance, so stern and so calm, as I listened to her instruction given in a quiet manner, and with unfaltering faith, her home forever desolated, her old age a hideous empty blank, but she came down nevertheless to show us how to bandage the wounds of men, to teach us patience, endurance and control under all circumstances. At night she returns to her lonely hearth to mourn those brave boys, but did she not need our sympathy?

To us watching this superb example she seemed to embody the spirit of courage, which admits no defeat. The valiant heart rising above the wreck of happiness and home, to do its duty to La Patrie.

Only a short distance separates us from the battlefields where the manhood of France and England are daily laying down their lives in defence of their country. To us who have remained in France, life has become a very reality, as we go forth in sober garb and spirit to do what we can for these suffering hundreds, wounded men and boys, lonely young widows, stricken parents. We realize intensely that life in Europe has utterly changed. The order of things has passed away. What will replace it?

Instead of the ordinary headstone Mrs. Edwin L. Hasler has had built in the Lake Forest Cemetery of Chicago a memorial to her husband a fountain in the water of which a family of wren birds, as we go forth in sober garb and spirit to do what we can for these suffering hundreds, wounded men and boys, lonely young widows, stricken parents. We realize intensely that life in Europe has utterly changed. The order of things has passed away. What will replace it?

Many boys of them, this checked, red colored, bright-eyed but crippled for life. Older men, fathers of families, bronzed and calm, thankful to be in France, with the thought of soon returning to their wives and children.

May they there regain their health and strength. To these brave ones we all owe an immense debt of gratitude. But when they return, we may be facing now a very different outlook.

What impressed me above all is their modesty, their patriotism. Whether they are doctors or lawyers, peasants or little artisans they all show the same patient, patriotic spirit. They count their sufferings as nothing compared to the welfare of the nation.

The life of the last ten years which we knew and loved so well has vanished like the snows of yester year. Where were the palaces, the rich and the poor, the hospitals, the music of the harp, the gay young girls of other days who laughed and flirted and danced in these airy halls, are now demure Red Cross nurses in severe white linen gowns, the Red Cross emblems on their white wrists, a virginal testimony to their real nature and pitying passion for the helpless.

What a few awful months of the world's war means to us over here you who continue to live much as usual can hardly have little conception. To you the pageant and tragedy of war is as "a tale that is told." Very horrible, perhaps, but of necessity it cannot affect you intimately. You can know little of the heart-rending, day-by-day experience, the hourly ordeals demanded of men and women of France.

A Mother's Example Some few weeks ago I attended a class for "First Aid to the Injured," whose matron was rather a formidable French woman laden with years and honors. As I went in a friendly Red Cross nurse, I received a telegram two hours ago announcing the death of both her sons, but you know her husband was killed and now she has given her boys to France. She does not want it to be mentioned. Do not refer to it." As I looked at the wrinkled, but composed countenance, so stern and so calm, as I listened to her instruction given in a quiet manner, and with unfaltering faith, her home forever desolated, her old age a hideous empty blank, but she came down nevertheless to show us how to bandage the wounds of men, to teach us patience, endurance and control under all circumstances. At night she returns to her lonely hearth to mourn those brave boys, but did she not need our sympathy?

To us watching this superb example she seemed to embody the spirit of courage, which admits no defeat. The valiant heart rising above the wreck of happiness and home, to do its duty to La Patrie.

Only a short distance separates us from the battlefields where the manhood of France and England are daily laying down their lives in defence of their country. To us who have remained in France, life has become a very reality, as we go forth in sober garb and spirit to do what we can for these suffering hundreds, wounded men and boys, lonely young widows, stricken parents. We realize intensely that life in Europe has utterly changed. The order of things has passed away. What will replace it?

Instead of the ordinary headstone Mrs. Edwin L. Hasler has had built in the Lake Forest Cemetery of Chicago a memorial to her husband a fountain in the water of which a family of wren birds, as we go forth in sober garb and spirit to do what we can for these suffering hundreds, wounded men and boys, lonely young widows, stricken parents. We realize intensely that life in Europe has utterly changed. The order of things has passed away. What will replace it?

Many boys of them, this checked, red colored, bright-eyed but crippled for life. Older men, fathers of families, bronzed and calm, thankful to be in France, with the thought of soon returning to their wives and children.

May they there regain their health and strength. To these brave ones we all owe an immense debt of gratitude. But when they return, we may be facing now a very different outlook.

What impressed me above all is their modesty, their patriotism. Whether they are doctors or lawyers, peasants or little artisans they all show the same patient, patriotic spirit. They count their sufferings as nothing compared to the welfare of the nation.

The life of the last ten years which we knew and loved so well has vanished like the snows of yester year. Where were the palaces, the rich and the poor, the hospitals, the music of the harp, the gay young girls of other days who laughed and flirted and danced in these airy halls, are now demure Red Cross nurses in severe white linen gowns, the Red Cross emblems on their white wrists, a virginal testimony to their real nature and pitying passion for the helpless.

What a few awful months of the world's war means to us over here you who continue to live much as usual can hardly have little conception. To you the pageant and tragedy of war is as "a tale that is told." Very horrible, perhaps, but of necessity it cannot affect you intimately. You can know little of the heart-rending, day-by-day experience, the hourly ordeals demanded of men and women of France.

A Mother's Example Some few weeks ago I attended a class for "First Aid to the Injured," whose matron was rather a formidable French woman laden with years and honors. As I went in a friendly Red Cross nurse, I received a telegram two hours ago announcing the death of both her sons, but you know her husband was killed and now she has given her boys to France. She does not want it to be mentioned. Do not refer to it." As I looked at the wrinkled, but composed countenance, so stern and so calm, as I listened to her instruction given in a quiet manner, and with unfaltering faith, her home forever desolated, her old age a hideous empty blank, but she came down nevertheless to show us how to bandage the wounds of men, to teach us patience, endurance and control under all circumstances. At night she returns to her lonely hearth to mourn those brave boys, but did she not need our sympathy?

To us watching this superb example she seemed to embody the spirit of courage, which admits no defeat. The valiant heart rising above the wreck of happiness and home, to do its duty to La Patrie.

Only a short distance separates us from the battlefields where the manhood of France and England are daily laying down their lives in defence of their country. To us who have remained in France, life has become a very reality, as we go forth in sober garb and spirit to do what we can for these suffering hundreds, wounded men and boys, lonely young widows, stricken parents. We realize intensely that life in Europe has utterly changed. The order of things has passed away. What will replace it?

"Never before has so much care and attention been given to men's sport clothes."—Men's Wear.

Sport coats, sport shirts, sport ties and sport suits.

Shirts with adjustable collars for the links and the court.

The new ties, white flannel trousers and soft collars.

Suits for vacation and weekends. Two-piece suits at $25.00 to $35.00.

For the cool evening, sweater-coats and macintoshes that will please you.

A GOOD PLACE TO BUY GOOD CLOTHES

Gilmour's 68 King Street

IN YOUR EYES

What is it that is causing all that trouble with your eyes?

Are the eye muscles following those laws laid down for them by nature?

Are they working in harmony and without strain?

Are your eye nerves being exhausted and irritated by the unnatural demands made upon them by some form of eye-strain that you have?

I shall be pleased to set your mind at rest on these points.