Many friends in the city and West St. John will regret to learn of the death of Jennie, widow of John Coyle, which occurred this morning at her residence, 78 Union street, west. She is survived by two sons, John and Francis; one daughter, Jennie Coughlan, and two step-daughters, Sister
Mary Ernestine, of the Holy Family Hospital, Prince Albert, Sask., and Mrs. R. A. Thompson of Windsor, Vt.

THE COAL TRADE.

Government Merchant Marine, tied up in idleness in the vicinity of Montreal, rapidly deteriorating, the only explanation offered as far as I know is that their large, heavy engines, boilers and machinery are placed in the centre of the vessels, which with necessary fuel accommodation leaves little or no room the vessels, which with necessary liter accommodation leaves little or no room for cargo.

Irrespective of what may be the correct reason for this idleness, I suggest turning them into coal barges (however degrading that might seem); that their boilers, engines and machinery be removed, which would lighten their draft from four to six feet, and the non-requirement of power fuel would lighten their draft a couple of feet more, so they would carry a 2,000-ton cargo of coal from Nova Scotia to Hamilton and all other Ontario and Quebec ports; and a steamer flagship would tow half a dozen of these, and transport this coal for $1.50 per ton at most, and I believe eventually for $1.

Whether the Government convert the idle marine or not, it certainly seems to me their duty, in the interests of Canada, to immediately inaugurate a lake-carrying fleet of coal barges for Nova Scotia and Alberta coal now that the Nova Scotia coal has proven so excellent for coking, and I believe Alberta coal is just as good.

Yours truly,

W. O. SEALEY.

The Utmost in Cigars

In certain circles the story is not new.

The firm, a prosperous hardware partnership, had been developed from small beginnings by the two partners, Matthew Taylor and John Mann.

Taylor was a hard-headed practical man, wise with years of wholesale and

Mann, on the other hand, knew little about hardware, but was an expert all round business man and accountant.

The two, each an expert in his own line, had combined almost perfectly to build up the business. "Indispensable" was the word they used in describing

And then, just when they were on the threshold of greater things, Mat-thew Taylor fell ill and died.

Money was "tight." The future of the business hung in the balance. And, but for one thing, the prospect of a bad failure would have stared John Mann

Years before, John Mann had insisted that they provide for an emergency of this nature by a $25,000 North American Life Business Policy. The receipt of this substantial sum turned the tide.

John Mann was able to maintain the firm's credit standing; he engaged a capable executive to take over his deceased partner's duties; and what would otherwise have been a disastrous storm
