WITH BAYONET AND LASH

Appalling Stories of Hun Crimes—Torture of Prisoners.

As prisoners of war come out of Germany, and are enabled to speak freely of appalling stories of brutality continue to be revealed. A "Daily Express" correspondent visited the camp for the repatriated British prisoners at Sandholm, a short distance from Copenhagen, and there obtained some shocking disclosures of Hun infamy. A corporal of the 1st Royal Warwickshire from Doherty, a yellow-moustached, home-faceted Anglo-Irishman, told the following story speak in low restrained voice, and obviously fearful of seeming to be guilty of exaggeration. As a preliminary he produced a strip of rubber ten inches long and of the thickness of three fingers, which he had smuggled out of Germany. "With this weapon," he said, "the cook knocked man after man senseless if he was suspected of trying to get second helping at dinner, smashing the prisoners across the face, jaw, and ear. The victims were carried outside and cold water dashed over them to revive them." While this man was speaking a sailor entered, and seeing the rubber, instantly confirmed those details, showing where the instrument was used on the jaw and neck. He added that the Russians especially were treated abominably being forced to kneel for hours, holding their hands behind them and lifting their own feet from the hard floor, while a German sentry with his rifle aimed straight at them in the chest and face with the butt if their feet were not held up. In other cases Englishmen's wrists were lashed to a stake, with their toes just touching the snow-covered ground, and there left freezing for an indefinite period, while many were prodded with bayonets. All these for such offences as refusing to be worked to death. A Manchester man who worked in a German sugar factory told me that even in the morning to seven at night, including Sundays, said that one day he went to the lavatory and was away for three minutes. On returning he was accused of being absent for half an hour, and when he denied this he was bayoneted through the arm, back and side, and afterwards was given six weeks imprisonment for insolence. Another worked on a canal. He was turned out at 6:30 a. m., and given a piece of bread and some coffee. No breakfast was given, and during the half-hour for dinner at mid-day rotten soup was served from two pig troughs in a cart. Often there was no time even to eat this after waiting behind a queue of 150 men. A similar meal was served another man showed his right foot, on which was a large brown-black scar, where a guard had deliberately poured scalding coffee over him. This was done in many other cases. The same man described the place at Botzow, where Berlin throws its refuse, and where four British were in deadly fear of being sent there, and one Englishman, in order to escape from it, picked a quarrel with another man, daring him to smash his finger. On this man refusing, the Englishman put his hand on the rail while the other punched a wagon of dust. "The latter became angry, lifted his spade and smashed the Englishman's fingers, thus to his great joy freeing him from this place."

Another German non-commissioned officer named Schubert, who was nicknamed "Porky Bill," because he ate pork and was fond of fighting, and spoke English, receiving the prisoners with foul abuse, called them the "scum of the earth," and said they were fit to be shot in Germany, and that he would "give them hell." This man, said one of the prisoners, was a "holy terror," tying men to trees and lashing them with their work. A man of the Rifle Brigade who was at Doherty had a bad rupture. Nevertheless he was forced to work in one and a half feet snow in January. When he was brought in the German military doctors, however, behaved quite decently and did their best for him.

One of the military prisoners told of a terrible case at Doherty early in 1915, when a young marine was crucified to the floor of the tent, face downwards, and prisoners were coming in sick. When we complained to him of the treatment, we had received his reply was: "Let them get worse treatment, they are not dying fast enough."

Colonel Hazard, who was attached to the 16th Rifle Division, was captured during the March push, and was taken to Grandenzet, said: "Out of 500 men, 400 were sick of influenza, but dying men were refused admission to the town hospital, a mile away, and a half away, on the ground that patients were not admitted after 10:30, and it was then noon. The men were accordingly left driven back again. These German doctors were as guilty of murder in these cases as when, while I was acting as nurse, they refused to be thus shepherded, the commandant gave heart stimulants to dying men, declaring that they had none, when, as a matter of fact, they had liberal supplies of both digitalis and strychnine. In all these cases the men died. The commandant at Grandenzet punished the officer prisoners quite unfeelingly. He confined them to their quarters for refusing to obey a command to walk in three and fours round the exercise ground. He called out some of the guard and ordered them to shepherd the officers through the doorway of their hut as they approached it. As the officers refused to be thus shepherded, the commandant called out the whole guard, who, using both rifle butts and bayonets, prodded the men in the back. One died and struck in this fashion, the officers were doing their best to squeeze through the narrow doorway to the town hospital, when a British commandant of nurses, named Melster, ordered the soldiers to fire on the defenceless prisoners. Scores of them would have been killed had the order been carried out, but just at the critical moment the commandant countermanded it."

S.S. Elswick Grange, 2572, Berlin.
S.S. Manchester, Division, 3774,
Naples, Feb. 26—Str Dunbridge,
St. John, N. B.

Foreign Ports
Genoa, Feb. 25—Sailed str Rossia, Halifax.
Due Wednesday
The Donaldson liner Cassandra is expected at this port Wednesday, according to her agents, the Robert Reid Co. Sunday afternoon she was 100 miles out of Cape Race, which would be about 200 miles from this port and easily mean three days' good sailing. This is her first trip with troops, and as far as is known, the sailing is entirely a military one.

Out of Quarantine
The D. G. S. Lady Laurier was released from quarantine shortly after nine o'clock yesterday morning and is now docked at the Long wharf.

Remembers The Poet.
The S.S. Lord Byron resembles her poetic namesake, in the fact that when she was abandoned, it is not known where she will eventually go, or how long she will stay. The vessel sailed from Gibraltar well over a month ago, presumably for this port; she put in to Bermuda eight days ago for coal and sailed, presumably for this port, but she had not entered the harbor up to last evening.

Arrived from "Gib."
The S.S. Melville, of the Elder Dempster line, arrived at this port yesterday morning, Mar. 3th at 12 o'clock on a general cargo for South Africa. The S.S. Elswick Grange, which also arrived yesterday in ballast, is taking on a full cargo of grain and flour at the McLeod wharf.

Taffnia Overdue
The S.S. Taffnia, 23 days out of Gibraltar, is several days overdue at this port.
Schooner Abandoned
London, Feb. 27—Schr Gladys Pearn (Br), from Burn Nfld., for Oporto, was abandoned, no date, but at 10 N, 10 34 25 W; crew landed at Dover.

Dangers to Navigation.
Sir Lake Fargo reports Feb. 27, 10 miles SE of Bermuda, passed a large spar, standing upright in the water. Feb. 17, at 26 25 N, 10 72 38 W, a dorell scow awash, with about 40 feet of foremast standing.
Feb. 26, at 26 N, 10 14 20 W, a waterlogged schooner
Feb. 11, at 44 40 N, 10 47 53, a field of ice about 1 mile long and 1-2 mile wide.
Feb. 15, at 48 26 N, 10 47 03, field of ice 2 miles to the northward.

GROWING DEAF WITH HEAD NOISES? TRY THIS!
If you are growing hard of hearing and fear Catarrhal Deafness, or if you have roaring, rumbling, hissing noises in your ears, or your hearing is getting fainter, get a ounce of Parmitol (double strength), and add to it 1-4 pint of hot water and a little granulated sugar. Take this treatment four times a day. This will often bring quick relief from the distressing head noises. Choked nostrils should open, breathing become easy and the mucus stop dropping into the throat. It is easy to prepare costs little and is pleasant to take. Anyone who has been afflicted with Catarrhal Deafness or who has head noises should give this prescription a trial.
