Many years ago there lived a little boy whom we will call willie.

Willie's father had been deed for years; but he had a loving band of brothers and eisters, and a mother who nobly strove to stand in place of both parents towards her fatherless little cane.

Willie's mitther had not been sure that she had a mother who nobly strove to stand in place of both parents towards her fatherless little cane.

Willie's mitther had not been sure that she had a firm her heart to God, and a coming from church one day, bowed bonasth a sense of guilt before one day, bowed bonasth a sense of guilt before one day, bowed bonasth a sense of guilt before the set of guilt before.

Willie's mither had not been sure that she had given her heart to God; and coming from church one day, howed beneath a sense of guilt before God's pure eye, she sought her own room for prayer.

Willie followed her as far as the door, and throwing himself on the face, but pussed in the work that he might hear him mother pray.

And they praye—it has ever since lingered in his heart. Such excess placed her as a far as the door, and throwing himself on the floor, he placed his ear at the weak that he might hear him mother pray.

And they praye—it has ever since lingered in his heart. Such excess placed in the continue of an in the praye—it has ever since lingered in his heart. Such excess placed in the continue of the prayer.

mean men. By this he does not mean that he shall literally serve a monarch, appear at his court, but that he shall rank with ruling men, and be a companion of the wise and powerful. Now, I suppose, boys, you all wish when you become men to rank with the best and wises men of your times. None of you want to rank with the men who dig canals, clean streets, and carry heavy hads of mortar up long ladders. You want to be well thought of by those who will be good, wise, intuitigent, and wealthy men when you are grown up. In fact, you all want to be such men yourselves.

Now, the secret of getting into the ranks of these men is to be found in the advice which an old minister once gave a youth.

"I am going to be a merchant," said the youth; "what advice can you give me?"

"Mind the five P's!" replied the minister.

Whatever tends to elevate man of his business, to bear rebuffs, and to bide his his movement. Whatever tends to elevate man from the cold, and to compensate for their suffertime. He was polite to everybody, even to children. He was punctual to a moment always, punctual as the clock. He never "gage up" sympathy of every one who professes to be a what it was proper to begin doing. These five P's were his ladder. They led up, up, up, and the bodies as well as to the souls of men. Some sex "Testotalism is not the Goznel" ably more food than theirs, while at the same P's were his ladder. They led up, up, up, and in a few years he was known as a pious, prosperous, useful, and honoured man. The five P's made a man of him.

Here, then, is a secret worth knowing, boys, Here is a ladder worth owning. On it every one of you may mount to a happy manhood—but mind! you must keep the first P Piety at the bottom. If you don't the ladder will tumble and never professed to be the Gospel; but teadown and pitch you into rain. So begin your ladder by seeking God's favour. Make Piety P No. 1.
