There appears to be a popular belief that all Germans should be despised and all German views treated with contempt. This is not right. A German writer recently expressed the belief that in spite of their undoubted bravery the British troops must be defeated because the organization of the Germans is superior. He further said that the British respect for individual liberty was too great to permit of thorough organization. Had Britain learned this lesson earlier the end of the war would be more nearly in sight.

NEW YORK PRESS COMMENT

STOCK MARKET COMMENT. SUN: Proof seemed to be furnished by yesterday's Stock Exchange session that the square list was not in a particularly sensitive technical position. A fairly persuasive trading test, was had by the overnight news of the sinking of the steamship Armenian, with a loss of American lives. Neither this episode nor the condition of inertia in which Wall Street has been lately, nor the holiday prospect, with its uncertain contingencies of recess occurrences, nor the persistent continuation of British liquidation of investment securities here, brought any particular pressure on stocks. The market was irregular and more or less heavy most of the day, but displayed underlying firmness and the dealings seemed to be almost wholly professional.

TIMES: Interest in the investment market was divided yesterday between the unexpectedly favorable response to the public offering of the new issue of New York City bonds and a continuance of the foreign liquidation of our securities. The stock market was an uninteresting affair, dull, and showing few price changes of any importance save in stocks which reflect special influences rather than general market sentiment.
