THE SPRING FEVER

Spring, see here, With my complaint I would acquaint Your ear. How is it that you have gaily clothed the flowers Kissed them with sun and wood them with showers! And here am I, still in winter's duds arrayed.

With coat that is rusty and trousers quite frayed? Spring, just ransack your closets and see

If you can't fix up a chap like me. You had out the trees a dress of bright green, And let me roam in an old has-been.

To the snake, horse and bear you give fine new suits, But you don't even hand me a new pair of boots:

You give to the bird a home both cheery and breezy, While I have a room that's small dark and wheezy.

The squirrel who swings on the tall limbs of the tree, His breakfast and dinner are dashed up by thee,

But my daily dinner is punched out on a ticket, By a pert little maid who sits in a wicket.

Now then, Spring, There is another thing That needs elucidating Just while you're waiting, The Spring Fever.

That fever of yours—that blamed unrest That tightens our hat and pokes out our vest,

That fills us with yearnings very profound, That tells us that plums in the distance are found,

And then we pine and long for wings That we may swoot and get these things— An hour of thee and we hate our work,

Another hour and we commence to shirk, For warm blows the breeze, cheerful the day,

To throw up our job and hustle away We feel 't would be the proper thing. —Exchange.

FOR THE STOMACH'S SAKE

Certain bibulous citizens of Westport possess a thirst that objects to observing the close season established by the license law, and in order to satisfy it they have been obtaining requisitions from the medical men freely.

On Sunday the Methodist minister delivered a very pointed sermon on the subject and called for a rigid enforcement of the law. At a recent meeting of the license commissioners in Brockville, in discussing Westport affairs, the Times says, Mr. Farish and the License Inspector astonished their auditors by the statement that in that village examination of the records disclosed the fact that in a period of two months no less than 127 doctor's prescriptions for intoxicating liquors were issued during prescribed hours. These prescriptions were for no small quantities either. From a mental calculation Mr. Parish arrived at the conclusion that in that small village these figures represent an average of 13 persons daily who get sick while the bars are closed. He thought this was a matter requiring rigid enforcement of the law. He also suggested that all persons desirous of enforcing the liquor laws should pay attention to that portion of it that makes the purchaser who buys during prohibited hours amenable to the law as well as the seller.

A PISCATOIAL ODE

BY A NEW JERSEY YANKEE

There's an itching, and a longing, and there's trouble all around, When the ice has left the water and the frost has left the ground, When the robin strikes the orchard, and the crocus gets in sight, And the green comes in the meadow and the fish begin to bite.

There's trouble in the office, and there's trouble in the air, There's trouble in the school-room, and there's trouble everywhere; There's discontent and fever and there's restlessness at night,

When the air of spring is mellow and the fish begin to bite. In the city, in the country, in the village and the town,

In the lonely way back hamlet where the brook goes winding down; There are signs of preparation, exaltation, and of joy,

With the old man and the young man and the freckled visaged boy. When the fish begin to hunger, that's the time of year for me,

I would rather go to Charleston Lake than to London or Paris; Cannot wait to talk of trouble, cannot even stop to write,

The ice is out of Charleston and the fish are going to bite.
